RULED BY CORRUPT RINGS

THE DEMOCRACY AND GOVERNMENT OF LOUISIANA.

A COMMUNITY IN THE HANDS OF CLIQUES OF PROFESSIONAL POLITICIANS—MEN WHO CONTROL FOR THEIR OWN BENEFIT—PLAIN FACTS PLAINLY TOLD—RESULTS OF DEMOCRATIC SUPREMACY—GOOD CITIZENS ALARMED BUT POWERLESS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 14.—During the years of Republican rule in Louisiana there were many wrongs committed by the Government, of which the people justly complained. Political interests were only too often considered before the general welfare, the negroes, who ruled by right of their undoubted majority, were in very many cases totally unfit for the responsible duties of citizenship, and the white men by whom they were led were often influenced by selfish and corrupt motives. While all this is true, however, it is none the less a fact that at no time, even during the worst period of what is called Radical rule, was the State at the mercy of so unscrupulous and venal a clique of political tricksters as it is to-day. The dominant party of Louisiana—the Democratic—is rotten to the core; its every policy is dictated by personal, selfish, and corrupt motives; the men who now appear prominently as its nominees for State and Legislative offices owe their nomination to trades and bargains of the most unsavory character. The much-lauded Democratic Party in this portion of the State is controlled by a mob; in the country districts all its machinery is absolutely in the hands of men who, snapping their fingers in the face of public opinion, have openly declared in favor of repudiating the legally contracted State debt. When the hot-blooded young men of the Crescent City White League defied the authorities on the ever-memorable 14th of September, 1874, when on that day they filled the principal square of their capital with dead and wounded men, their one plea was that they desired to deliver the Commonwealth from "ring rule." Again, on the 4th of January following, when for a moment it seemed as if the Union flag was to be fired upon, and the civil war break out anew, the White League cried "Down with ring rule," and many good men gloried in their daring, and applauded their acts of revolution. So during all the dark and anxious months which followed, until the desertion of Gov. Packard and the final overthrow of the majority Government, the one plea constantly advanced by the White League leaders was "we are fighting to break up a corrupt and despotic ring."

If this was in reality the purpose of the respectable men in the league, and there can be no doubt that such was, indeed, the object of some of them, they have failed most woefully. They risked their lives to bring about a desired result, and that result being obtained, they were cast aside, while the worst elements in a corrupt and lawless party took possession of "the machine" and have ever since been running it for their own benefit. The roughs of New-Orleans, the firemen and ward ruffians, now rule its government and declare who shall administer its affairs. The Republican "carpet-baggers" have been overthrown. Who have taken their places? Not the native and best, about whom there was so much heard here a year or two ago, not the heads of our "first families," not representatives of "our wealth and intelligence," but a clique of shrewd political manipulators who, strange as it may seem, are themselves for the most part "carpet-baggers" in the very fullest sense of the term. By this clique the Democratic Party of Louisiana is controlled, and through it the State is governed. By its manipulations the chief men on the State ticket, which, by hook or crook, fair means or foul, is to be declared elected on the first Tuesday in next December, were nominated. There is not a newspaper in New-Orleans which is not fully informed of all these facts, which does not know that every statement which I make here is absolutely true; yet not one of them dares openly to denounce the Ring or attempt to break up its power. It operates in the name of Democracy, it is supported by men of few scruples, who obey its orders without question. It is neither safe nor popular to make any attack upon it, and until within the past few days its power was almost supreme. How it has, for the moment ceased to be so will appear further on. In the first place, however, it will be necessary to go more into detail regarding the personnel of the Democratic State ticket and the means which were employed to nominate it.

Louis Alfred Wiltz the nominee for Governor, was, in 1876, a candidate for the same place, and went to the Baton Rouge Convention with the 128 members of the New-Orleans delegation pledged to him. Because of the chronic feud between the city and country he was defeated, and Nicholls, the present Governor, was nominated by the influence of the country delegates. Since then Mr. Wiltz has been continually maneuvering to obtain a nomination at the expiration of Nicholls's term. He is a man of great affability of manner; as far as is known is free from the suspicion of personal corruption, and has a considerable following among the members of the powerful New-Orleans fire organization and the creole element in the city. This was his stock in trade. With it alone, however, he could not hope to succeed. Indeed, without the aid of the ruling clique here he could not even control the city delegation. The chief man in that clique are Mr. E. A. Burke, a native of a South-western State, who came here since the war, who did most excellent work for the Democracy during the Electoral troubles of 1876, and who is everywhere conceded to be a man of marked ability. Equally, some people say more, prominent in the same connection, is Mr. James Houston, who came here from the West, who has twice "killed his man," doing the work openly and with a neatness and dash which won him many admirers. In addition to all this, Mr. Houston is a man of much force of character, decidedly a gentleman in his manners, and possessed of a courage and will which well fit him to deal with the rough elements in the New-Orleans Democracy. To Messrs. Burke and Houston—"the carpet-bag bosses," they are called by their enemies here—Wiltz was obliged to appeal before he could look for the place on the Democratic ticket which he now holds. As it happened, they saw how they could use him, and they consented to lend him their aid. At this time the Constitutional Convention was on the eve of meeting. It consisted of 72 Democrats who were pronounced in favor of repudiating the State debt, 32 who favored a recognition of the debt and the payment of a low rate of interest, and 30 Republicans. Mr. Wiltz aspired to be President of the convention, but as he was believed to be in favor of doing justice to the unfortunate bondholders who had trusted their money to the honor of Louisiana, he was opposed by a majority of the delegates from the country. In the end, however, by the shrewd manipulation of Mr. Burke, in mass, as people believe, this opposition was overcome, and Wiltz became the President of the convention. Those who favored repudiation had no reason to repent of their choice. From the first he put no stone in their way, and as a consequence he became very popular with the men of the interior. At the same time, however, he earned the bitter enmity of the respectable men, merchants and others, in the city who favored a just settlement of the debt, and it was predicted that the city delegates would strongly oppose him in the convention called to nominate a Governor. This was a mistake. Messrs. Burke and Houston, with their followers, came gallantly to the rescue. The mob delegates from the city united with the repudiators from the interior, and so Mr. Louis Alfred Wiltz became the Gubernatorial candidate of "the pure and high-minded Democracy of sovereign Louisiana"—the quotation being from the campaign orators who are now advocating his claim in all parts of the State.

The combination, as it was at first made up, provided that Mr. Wiltz should be Governor and Mr. Houston Auditor. But to this the countrymen would not consent, pointing out with some significance that Houston was the next friend of Mr. Burke, the State Treasurer, and that under such circumstances the offices of Treasurer and Auditor might not be quite so great a check upon each other as was contemplated by law. Besides, it was contended that the city could not justly ask for the exclusive control of the Executive Department, the State Treasury, and the Auditor's office. Such being the case, it was for a time believed that Houston would force his own nomination, to the exclusion of Wiltz, thereby giving the Governorship to the country; but he was true to his bargain. A compromise was effected. Burke was retained in the Treasury, with the understanding that he should be aided by the State Government to secure Kellogg's place in the United States Senate should that body declare that neither Kellogg nor Mr. Spofford, his contestant, were elected, and Houston was assured, under the new Constitution, of retaining his fat office of Administrator of Public Improvements for four years to come. In pursuance of the same general bargain, Allen Jumel, an ex-steam-boat clerk, and a repudiator, was made the candidate for Auditor. The Lieutenant-Governorship, a place of no power, was, as a sop to the respectable White League element, given to Samuel D. McEnery, a very good man. Will. A. Strong and Edwin H. Fay were nominated for Secretary of State and Superintendent of Public Education, to please the country. J. C. Egan, who has well feathered his nest in connection with the thousands of tax suits now pending in Louisiana, and whom J. Madison Wells has publicly charged with having murdered a man in cold blood, was retained as Attorney-General. So the Democratic State ticket was completed. And now the New-Orleans ring of "carpet-baggers" and the country ring of repudiators are frantically calling on the people who three years ago were complaining so bitterly of the oppression of ring and carpet-bag rule, to give their votes to "the regular candidates of the reformed Democracy."

As has already been intimated, the gentlemen who hold control in New-Orleans have, for the moment, at least, lost their absolute supremacy. They were able to do as they liked in regard to the State ticket, but as to the nominees for the Legislature, their tools demanded their own way, and had it. The result has been the nomination of a Legislative ticket which is literally a disgrace to the community. It is made up of murderers, thieves, and ruffians; of men so vile that even the New-Orleans Democrat is unwillingly forced to denounce them as "persons whose lack of fitness is a matter of common notoriety." On the same subject the New-Orleans Times, a trifle more in detail, speaks as follows:

"At no time since the war has the moral tone in the now dominant party in New-Orleans been so low; at no time have intelligence and civic virtue been at so great a discount in the local councils and real management of that political organization. Even during the era of reconstruction, when political corruption and official venality held high sway, not only were but throughout the land—even during those shameless years, our local affairs were in no worse condition than they are to-day. Truly, the situation is lamentable. The civic instinct of the great mass of the well-thinking people of the city revolts at the nominations made by the party whose vast majority in New-Orleans must inevitably give it the election. Yet nobody offers a remedy."

These statements are the truth, but not all the truth. As yet no paper here has dared to print more than glittering generalities regarding this outrageous Legislative ticket. The following are a few of the details: Two of the candidates for the Assembly are murderers; one of the candidates for Senator is a notorious bribe-taker, another is an ex-French convict, a third is not a citizen of the district in which he is running, and, with only two or three exceptions, the whole list is made up of outcasts and vagabonds. It is to them and to men like them that the Government of the State is to be committed. Of course there are a few of the best citizens who protest, men like John Phelps, of the Cotton Exchange, Perry Nugent, J. B. Lafitte, A. H. May, O. B. Penn, R. B. Pleasants, Lionel Levy, Mandeville Marigny, Louis Phillips, and many others of the same class; men of property, large business interests, and old family. They all "protest," just as they did years ago against wrongs, some of which were real and the most imaginary; but their protests in this case will count for very little. Indeed, they must by this time have learned that no man in Louisiana, no matter what his antecedents, no matter how spotless his reputation or great his ability, can be elected to even the lowest office without the consent of the Democratic machine—a machine which they themselves have helped to make what it is. They were warned in time; they were told again and again that the one best way of purifying the politics of Louisiana was to leave the Democracy, ally themselves to the Republican Party, and by guiding and directing it secure good government and the control of the State. They scoffed at the idea. They could have nothing in common with negroes and political adventurers. They gave time, money, and energy to the thing about the overthrow of "the corrupt radicals." Now they have their reward. They see their State disgraced by men who repudiate just debts in the name of the Democratic Party; they see that party, upon which they built so much, in the absolute control of men whom they do not recognize as social equals, in the hands of what they themselves are pleased to call a ring of political adventurers and aliens. For all this they have themselves to blame. They know that there is one way out of the political complications which will in the end do far greater damage to their business than can now be computed. Taylor Beattie, the Republican nominee for Governor, is a man of their own kind, rich, honorable, cultured, and of old family. The same can be said of Mr. Gillespie, the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, and of other gentlemen on the Republican ticket. Why do not these property-holders of Louisiana support such men in preference to the nominees of rings, cliques, and professional pullers of political wires? The only answer which can be given is, "they are Radicals, and the white man in Louisiana who gives support to Radicals at once loses caste." Fortunately, there are many indications that the feeling is dying out, but it is still strong enough all over the State to secure the defeat of the Republican ticket, or rather the counting out of that ticket; it is still strong enough to give into the control of "alien rings," shameless repudiators, and ward ruffians the Democracy and the Government of Louisiana. THE SURPLUS REVENUE.

HEAVY DISBURSEMENTS TO BE MADE THIS MONTH—THE SURPLUS NOT LIKELY TO BE LARGE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—There seems to be an impression in financial circles that there will be a large surplus of revenue at the end of the current month, and that there will be, therefore, further purchases of 6 per cent bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury to be applied to the sinking fund. The large increase in the daily receipts furnishes the ground for this impression, but the fact seems to have been lost sight of that the disbursements for November will be unusually heavy. The regular quarterly payment of pensioners is made this month, which will take from the Treasury about $7,500,000, and, in addition to this large sum, there will be disbursed in November, for interest accrued on the funded 5 per cent bonds, over $2,000,000. These two items, aggregating nearly $10,000,000, will exhaust the greater portion of the surplus revenue of the month, so that the December debt statement will probably show the net surplus for November to be not more than $3,000,000. As the Secretary of the Treasury can only apply the actual surplus to purchase bonds for the use of the sinking fund, it will be seen that the amount he can thus invest for November will not be likely to be in excess of $3,000,000.

GOVERNOR AND GOVERNOR-ELECT.

ALBANY, Nov. 18.—Governor-elect Cornell was in the city to-day, and held a long interview with Gov. Robinson at the Executive Chamber this afternoon.

NATIONAL BANKRUPT LAW DESIRED.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 18.—The Boston Merchants' Association to-day appointed a committee to co-operate with other organizations in an effort to secure the enactment of a national bankrupt law.

TROUBLES IN THE CHURCH

SECESSION WHICH IS ASSERTED TO BAVOR OF REPUDIATION.

CHARGES AGAINST THE TRUSTEES OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH IN PLAINFIELD, N. J.—SECEDING MEMBERS ALLEGING IRREGULAR FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT—THE MATTER BEFORE A COUNCIL.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov. 18.—A council, composed of prominent Congregational clergymen and laymen, has been in session in this town for several days, the object being to decide on the course of the members of the Congregational church here who left it and organized a society of their own, repudiating the debts of the parent church. The Rev. M. E. Strieby has acted as Moderator, and the Rev. Mr. Haywood, of Elizabeth, as Secretary. The session of the council began on Friday last, when Samuel C. Roney made a long statement, explanatory of the action of the seceders from the church. Mr. Roney, in his statement, gave a complete history of the church from its foundation, and exposed what he called the "unholy ways of the Board of Trustees," of whom W. B. Stewart, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Plainfield, is the President. Mr. Roney is the leader of the secession movement, and his arraignment of the Trustees, if the facts which he states are true, is one of the most terrible indictments ever brought against a church organization.

Eight years ago, he says, in 1871, it was decided to make certain alterations and repairs to the church building, which was then mortgaged to the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church for $5,000. It was believed that, with the receipt of certain subscriptions, the repairs could be made, and the debt of the church could be paid. The expense of the carpenters' and masons' work alone was $11,798 69, and when the repairs were completed, the church found itself in debt to the amount of $44,831 21. This debt was contracted in face of the fact that the highest estimate ever put upon the building was $30,000, and the Mutual Fire Insurance Company places the estimate at only $25,000. "In plain terms," said Mr. Roney, "the debt contracted by the Board of Trustees is nearly double the estimated value of the entire building."

A meeting was called on Jan. 16, 1872, to consider the propriety of organizing another church, but the call was so worded that it was thought to be only an ordinary meeting. At that meeting, however, was formed a society to be known as the "First Congregational Church of Plainfield," and the argument used to induce those present to join was that the Congregational body would assume all debts and liabilities. There was no compliance with the statute, which states that there shall be a 10 days' notice given of the election of Trustees. They were then and there elected, and a resolution was passed authorizing them to confer with the Reformed Church in regard to the purchase of the building. Although power to "confer" was alone given, the very next day, Jan. 17, the transfer of the property was recorded in Elizabeth. This record shows that a new mortgage for $12,000 was executed by Mr. Stewart, the President of the Board of Trustees, to the Consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church, and that, besides the assumption of all the liabilities against the old church, there was a cash payment of $12,000. The new organization was thus formed with a total indebtedness of $59,400, and the Board of Trustees has never made to this day any report of this indebtedness to the church.

At a meeting of the new church organization on Jan. 30, 1872, the Rev. N. E. Smith was called to preside as Pastor, at an annual salary of $3,000; and a manual for the government of the church was read and passed, section by section. In this manual was a clause expressly forbidding the Trustees to buy, sell, transfer, or mortgage any real estate without a vote of the society. Yet two of the men who drew up this clause were two of the body who made the transfer of the property and assumed the debts of the old church. Up to January of the present year, no member of the church has been able to get a report of the financial condition of the organization, and the state of affairs is now for the first time made known to nine-tenths of the congregation. Since Jan. 16, 1862, the Trustees of the church have had in cash $46,326 61, and the Consistory $32,831 21, making a total of $79,157 82 collected from the members of the church, and yet the organization is in debt to the amount of about $51,000. These being the facts, Mr. Roney said that he and his friends had concluded to sever their connection with the church, and to form a new organization, free from debt. They did not want to be regarded as repudiators; they did not want to avoid any honest obligations; but they did not feel bound to fall with a Board of Trustees which had not done its duty by the church or by them.

Mr. Freeman, who has been acting as Treasurer of the church, said that he had never given a complete statement of the indebtedness for the reason that he kept account only of the pew rents and collections. The Trustees kept a private account of the other matters, and he considered that their reports to the board were pretty well whitewashed. So far as he was personally concerned, he heartily wished that he had never acted as Treasurer at all. Mr. Roney said that he had no charges to make against Mr. Freeman. He believed that that gentleman had done his whole duty, as he understood it. He had simply been hoodwinked, like a great many other members of the church.

Aaron Carter, Jr., and several other members of the council, were inclined to think that there was a flavor of repudiation about the movement of the men who are leaving their church in debt. This insinuation was promptly repelled by Mr. Roney, who said that if he could see any hope of the church eventually getting out of debt, he would be the last to leave it. But under the present management there was no hope of raising the debt. He charged the Board of Trustees, and especially the President, Mr. Stewart, with acting in bad faith toward the church. The congregation, he said, had been led to believe that the debt only amounted to $14,000, and Mr. Kimball was given the same impression when he was here trying to raise it. The men who were leaving the church were doing so not because of the debt, but because they had been deceived. They did not feel that they could longer trust the men placed in authority over them.

W. B. Stewart, the man against whom Roney and his friends are waging this war, holds a mortgage against the society for $13,400, money which he advanced when the church building was purchased. Mr. Roney says that he agreed to cancel this mortgage. In the council to-day Mr. Stewart said that he stood almost alone in defending the church. He had always defended it at its weakest point—the exchequer—and he meant to continue to defend it. The story that mortgages against the church had been kept a secret from the congregation, he pronounced a falsehood. "The Trustees," he said, "were always willing to give information to those who were entitled to receive it." But he did not think that the affairs of the church should be made public property. The Trustees have simply used ordinary discretion in withholding certain facts from the public. Had Mr. Roney or any member of the church applied to the Trustees for information, he would have received it instantly. "I have here," said Mr. Stewart, "our last report, made out by Mr. Kirkner, who is an expert and a very smart man—one who would have no 'white-washing.' It is a complete statement of what this church owes." Mr. Stewart then read the following statement:

Mortgage to Mutual Life Insurance Company	$10,000 00
Mortgage to W. B. Stewart	13,400 00
Interest on same	4,250 00
Notes in bank, &c.	5,598 75
Organ	1,800 00
Notes for Dr. Smith's salary	1,500 00
Due-bills to Dr. Smith	721 82
Sundry debts	332 15
Total debts	$35,702 72
Deducting two mortgages and paid notes	24,400 00
Total floating debt	$11,308 72

"So far as the mortgage which I hold for $13,400 is concerned," said Mr. Stewart, "I advanced the money for it, but I am willing to call it $10,000. I have spent a small fortune on this church already, and I am perfectly willing to spend another one."

After some argument by the members of the council, in which conciliation and brotherly feeling was urged, a committee of five was appointed, with Moderator Strieby at the head, to draw up a report of advice for the council. This committee held a meeting this afternoon, and Dr. Strieby was delegated to make the report, which will be presented to the council at a stated meeting early in December.

Mr. Stewart said to the TIMES reporter this afternoon, "The whole thing is a tempest in a tea-pot. Mr. Roney is a man who has a great opinion of Mr. Roney, and he is seeking for a little cheap notoriety. The accounts of the Trustees are all right, and the council will undoubtedly exonerate us from all the charges made against us."

A MINISTER UNDER A CLOUD.

THE PASTOR OF THE UNIVERSALIST CHURCH AT NORTH ADAMS CHARGED WITH IMMORALITY AND DECEIT.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., Nov. 18.—The State Universalist Committee on Fellowship, Order, and Discipline will begin to-morrow the trial of the Rev. E. S. Foster on charges which, if proved, will forever blast his reputation and shut him out from all respectable society, as well as from the ministry. Lascivious and deceitful conduct is the charge, in general terms. Mr. Foster assumed the charge of the Universalist parish in North Adams a little over four years ago. He was under a cloud then, having been charged with deceitful conduct in Winchester, Vt., and having been in jail for contempt of court; but his new parishioners did not take the trouble to investigate his record, and took him for what he seemed to be, a persecuted minister of average ability and good intentions. He had an interesting family, and the sympathy which was aroused by the stories from Vermont helped him into popular favor and regard.

Mr. Foster proved himself an energetic worker and a good financier, but was not so successful as a preacher. Though every week his sermons were advertised in the local newspapers, he failed to draw the crowds which he would fain have listen to his discourses. He became an intolerable "bore" to the local reporters on account of his constant request for "puffs," and even went so far as to print and circulate hand-bills to draw an audience. Personally he was liked, and except by those who had opportunities of knowing him thoroughly, was credited with intelligence and an estimable character. He was a tall, angular man, of sallow complexion, wore whiskers and a wig, and affected a suave and cordial manner. Whisperings of improper conduct reached the ears of the leading church members, but at first they treated them as malicious slanders. Finally, however, stories got into circulation which could not be ignored. One day, as is charged in a part of the written testimony in the hands of the church Examining Committee, Mr. Foster called at the house of Mrs. Wilbur to see her son, a boy 12 years old, about taking part in a Sunday-school concert. His conduct there was such, according to an affidavit, that Mrs. Wilbur ordered the minister out of the house. He went down on his knees and begged that he might be allowed to explain himself, but the woman was too angry to listen to anything and sent him off in a hurry. He wrote a letter to her asking her forgiveness, but all to no avail, and in less than a week the story had spread in certain circles. Mr. Sherwin, a builder, and one of Foster's parishioners, was one of those who repeated the story, and he was ordered to prove it. A committee was appointed by the church, and a meeting held for investigation. Mr. Sherwin appeared, but was not allowed to tell his story, and both he and his wife were expelled from the church for circulating malicious slanders against their Pastor.

The dissatisfaction with Foster grew, however, and when, early in the present year, he tendered his resignation, there were many who wished that it might be accepted. But the majority wanted him to remain, and for two or three months it was uncertain which way the question would be decided. Meantime, Foster was looking for a new place, and one Sunday he preached, it was reported, in Schenectady, N. Y. Soon after a letter signed "W. B. Thurston" came to Sheriff Hodskin, at this place, who was believed to have the documentary proof of Foster's criminality in Winchester, requesting him to send the papers to Schenectady "C. O. D." Thurston represented that the Universalist people of his city were determined to have Foster for their Pastor, and he was equally determined that they should not, because he was convinced that Foster was a bold, bad man. Hodskin thought this was a trick of Foster to get the papers into his possession, and so he got his son-in-law, Albert Sheldon, Clerk of the Parish, to answer Thurston's letter. Sheldon's letter was of such a character as to damage Foster's chances as a candidate at Schenectady if it used for that purpose, but it has been shown, it is alleged, that it was taken from the Post Office by Foster himself. Two or three weeks later the North Adams parish held a final meeting to decide upon Foster's going, when the minister, to show how he was persecuted, produced Sheldon's letter, which, he said, had injured his prospects in Schenectady. Naturally, Foster's friends united upon him more strongly than ever, and roundly censured the so-called mischief-makers who had been guilty of such gratuitous maliciousness. Resolutions regretful and commendatory were drawn up, money was given to the minister, and genuine sorrow was manifested when he announced that he was going to take charge of a church in Utica, N. Y. On his last Sunday in North Adams he called a church meeting, and Sheriff Hodskin and Albert Sheldon were expelled from the church without being given an opportunity even to protest.

This was about six months ago. Immediately after Foster's departure, Mr. Sherwin went to Schenectady and found that Foster had never preached for the Universalists there, that they had never thought of engaging him, and that no such man as W. B. Thurston lived there. These facts were communicated to some of the prominent members of the North Adams church, and, their eyes being opened by the statements of these young men, whose word could not be questioned, they set to work investigating for themselves, and as a result drew up a number of specifications charging Foster with licentiousness and deceit. The matter was placed before the State Committee referred to above, and it appointed July 9 as the time, and North Adams as the place for the trial. Foster was on hand with a number of witnesses from New-Hampshire and Vermont, ready to contest the case, but owing to some illegality in the method of procedure, the State Committee at the last moment decided to postpone the trial to Nov. 19. Foster is, of course, fighting for his bread and butter, and will do his utmost to disprove the charges. He demands that the trial shall be public, but the laws of the Church provide that all such examinations shall be private. A strenuous effort will be made to keep the names of the witnesses secret, as only on these conditions will many of them testify. A. E. Dennison will hear the evidence and report to the whole committee at Boston, where the counsel for both sides will make their arguments later. The trial will probably last several days.

SALE OF STOLEN TIMBER.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18.—A dispatch from Seattle says: "One million feet of logs, recently seized on the Snohomish River by a United States Special Agent of the Interior Department, for being cut in violation of the Timber laws, were sold yesterday at private sale to the Port Gamble Mill Company at $4 per 1,000 feet. This is the first instance where such logs have been sold here at the market value. Heretofore it has been the custom to sell the logs at auction, the buyers clubbing together and bidding them in at nominal figures. This and several other seizures recently made here will have the effect of putting a stop to the illicit cutting of timber, and general satisfaction is expressed among timber men at the result."

COLORED PEOPLE'S FAIR OPENED.

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 18.—The colored people's industrial fair was formally opened to-day. Gov. Jarvis delivered the opening address, followed by J. E. O'Hara and Col. Elliott, of South Carolina. Col. Man will speak to-morrow. It has been raining all day, but a fair crowd was present. Eight military companies and a number of fire companies composed the procession which escorted the Governor to the grounds.

DISASTER ON LAKE ONTARIO

NINETEEN LIVES PROBABLY LOST IN A STORM.

A FLEET OF TUG-BOATS, SCOWS, DREDGES, AND DERRICKS WRECKED NEAR SACKETT'S HARBOR—FOURTEEN PERSONS ONLY KNOWN TO BE SAVED—SOME OF THE VESSELS RECOVERED.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The tug C. P. Morey, Capt. Pappa, while steaming about the harbor about 7:30 A. M. to-day, discovered a water-logged tug at a distance in the lake. The Morey steamed out and picked up the strange tug, about a mile and a half out, which proved to be the Charles M. Riter, of Buffalo. There was no one aboard of her. She was nearly full of water, and, as the waves were rolling over her, would have sunk in a short time. All her doors were open, and her coal-bunkers were stove in. The Morey towed the Riter into this harbor, when the water was pumped out of her. Some of the clothing of the crew was still on board, and all the indications showed that she had been hastily abandoned.

The finding of the tug Riter was the first intimation received here of what later proved to be a terrible catastrophe, which happened on Lake Ontario, within 15 miles of this port, last night. It was soon learned that the large tug Seymour, Capt. Fleming, left Cape Vincent yesterday, at 1 P. M., for Buffalo, in company with four smaller tugs, and with three dredges, seven dump-scows, and three derricks in tow. The following composed the fleet as far as known: Tugs—Seymour, O. A. Thayer, Philip Becker, Charles M. Riter, and John Hickler; dredges, John Hickler No. 1, John Hickler No. 2, and Gordon. It was at once surmised that the Seymour and fleet had met with disaster, and the greatest excitement prevailed here, which was intensified by the following dispatch received here at noon from Sackett's Harbor: "A fleet consisting of three dredges, two derricks, and seven scows, owned by Hickler & Arnold, of Buffalo, started in tow of the tug Seymour from Cape Vincent at 1 o'clock yesterday, and had fine weather until after they passed Galloup Island, off Sackett's Harbor. Then a gale of wind sprang up from the north-east, with heavy snow. They got within five or six miles of Oswego, and then lost the light. The tug turned around and undertook to hold the fleet until daylight, but they broke away, and are lost, with all hands except six, who were rescued by the tug Seymour. There are 31 persons drowned and the fleet is a total loss." This dispatch also gave a list of 24 persons supposed to have been drowned, including several women and children.

The crew of the schooner Nellie P. Downey report that at 11:30 o'clock last night, when about 15 miles off Oswego, they had a narrow escape from collision with the Seymour's tow. They saw a long line of lights through the mist and snow, and supposed it was Oswego. They shortened sail and prepared to run in, when suddenly they saw a derrick under their jib-boom. They heard no voices and saw nothing more. The revenue cutter Manhattan, with the Oswego life crew, went out upon the lake to-day in search of the wrecks, but reports that nothing was seen.

A dispatch from Sodus Point, received at 2 P. M., stated that some of the scows and dredges were to be seen adrift off that point, 40 miles from here, and the large tug Gardner soon after started for Sodus Point to render assistance. The Gardner picked up one of the dredges and towed it into Sodus. Another dredge, now off Sodus, will be towed in to-morrow morning. A later dispatch states that the tug John Hickler was at Sodus Point, with 13 of the persons reported drowned by the Sackett's Harbor dispatch. The names of these 13 were received later, which leaves 19 yet to be accounted for at this time. It is yet hoped that other tugs and scows will be heard from, and that some of those reported lost will be found safe.

The following list gives the names of those reported saved in the Sodus Point dispatch:

Capt. Thompson.	Jerome Morrison and wife.
J. B. Young.	Charles Craryough.
Frederick Stroker.	Patrick Fennell.
Henry Hickler.	Judson Morrison.
Charles England and wife.	Three unknown men.

The names of the persons still missing, as far as known, are as follows:

Mr. Arnold, one of the proprietors.
Patrick Hogan, Grand Rapids, Mich.
Mr. Paul, Lachine.
George Palmer and wife, Vergennes, Vt.
Miss Morrison.
Edward Beason, Buffalo.
John Wood and son, Ogdensburg.
Noah Garrow, Ogdensburg.
H. Marshan, Ogdensburg.
William Scott, Ogdensburg.
Capt. Samuel Logan, Morrisburg, Ontario.
William Logan, Morrisburg, Ontario.

SACKETT'S HARBOR, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The tug Seymour, which lost the fleet of dredges and scows in the lake last night, was assisted by the four smaller tugs. When the gale struck the fleet all the tugs except the Seymour cut loose from the tow and sought to save themselves. The scows soon parted from the rest of the fleet, and have not since been heard from, and it cannot now be ascertained how many men were on board of them. The tug Riter was abandoned, and her crew boarded the Seymour. The Riter, however, was picked up near Oswego this morning. The tug A. O. Thayer sank, and, it is supposed, carried down the crew. The tug Baker was abandoned in a sinking condition, but in getting her alongside of the dredge Gordon they stove a hole in the latter which quickly filled her with water, and both crews were lost, except Thomas Smith and two Swedes. These clung to the cabin of the dredge, and were picked up at daylight this morning by the Seymour. This was all of the fleet the Seymour could find.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY AT LONG BRANCH.

LONG BRANCH, Nov. 18.—The Police have just made public a daring highway robbery, committed in the upper village on Friday night. James Conroy, a well-to-do feed merchant of this place, was returning home at 11 o'clock from the lower village, when two highwaymen from behind murderously attacked him with a club, dealing him a blow between the eyes which felled him to the ground. The ruffians then rifled him of his watch and money. Conroy laid for hours weltering in his blood before he was discovered by some citizens, who took him home. The family, not knowing how he met with his injuries, kept the news from the Police until he came to his senses to-day, and stated how he was robbed. Much excitement is caused over the affair, and suspicions are entertained against two persons, who will probably be arrested. No other motive is attributed to the assault, except that Conroy received a large remittance that day, which he left at home.

MARRIAGE IN THE ONEIDA COMMUNITY.

MERIDEN, Conn., Nov. 18.—William H. Woolworth, one of the principal members of the Oneida Community, was married to-night, at Wallingford, by Justice L. M. Hubbard, of that town, to Miss Caroline O. Mackrust. The groom is about 50 years of age, and the bride is only a few years his junior. They have been identified with the community for several years.

CAPITALISTS ON AN EXCURSION.

READING, Penn., Nov. 18.—President Gowen, of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, with a party of capitalists and railroad men from New-York and the oil regions, visited the extensive works of the Reading Railroad Company in this city this afternoon. They left here at 5 P. M. for a three days' trip through the coal region.

DALY VICTORIOUS AT WRESTLING.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The wrestling match between Ross and Daly was resumed to-night. The first fall was won by Daly and the next by Ross, who sprained his arm, and was unable to appear again. The match and champion medal were awarded to Daly, amid great applause, by the referee, M. J. Fenton.

LONG BRANCH LIQUOR CASES.

FREEHOLD, N. J., Nov. 18.—The cases of Messrs. Warren and Charles Leland, proprietors of the Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, and Eugene Fay, proprietor of the Centennial Hotel, came up to-day on argument. Both parties were indicted by the late Grand Jury on the charge of keeping a disorderly house—the technical term for selling liquor without a license. Despite the indictment, Fay's Hotel was relicensed on Tuesday. The cases were brought to the Supreme Court on writs of certiorari. The decision was expected to-day, but was not given. Further argument was postponed until Dec. 1. As the court will then be adjourned, the cases are considered as good as overturned, thus ending the Long Branch liquor fight.

FATAL TUNNEL EXPLOSION.

ABOUT THIRTY CHINAMEN REPORTED KILLED—TWELVE MEN INJURED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18.—An explosion occurred in tunnel No. 3, on the narrow-gauge railroad from San José to Santa Cruz, early this morning. From the meagre accounts thus far received, it appears that a blast was let off about 2,700 feet from the mouth of the tunnel, which caused an explosion of the gases generated by the filtering of coal-oil through the roof and sides of the tunnel. Twenty-one Chinamen and two white men were at work in the tunnel at the time. Immediately about 20 more Chinamen rushed into the tunnel with torches to aid their comrades, and when they had penetrated about 1,500 feet, their torches caused a second explosion, more violent than the first, shaking the mountain to its centre. The white men, Lindle and Johnson, were brought out terribly burned, and about 10 Chinamen, all seriously injured. As near as can be learned, about 30 Chinamen were killed. The second explosion destroyed the engines and works. Physicians have been sent to the scene from San José, and everything possible is being done for the sufferers.

From additional reports concerning the explosion, it appears that three explosions occurred. The first took place at 11:50 P. M., the second at 11:55 P. M., and the third at 12:20 A. M. The men were changing shifts at the time the first explosion took place. Seventeen Chinamen have been taken out, all horribly burned. Twenty-four dead remain in the tunnel. A Chinaman named Ah Wo was taken out, burned about the chest and injured internally. He was found dead in his cabin an hour afterward, strangled with a silk scarf. The Chinamen say that he hanged himself, but the indications are that he was strangled by his friends to put him out of his misery. There is a terrible scene of suffering in the camp, and ruin all around the mouth of the tunnel. The engine for pumping air is disabled, pipes are broken, sheds wrecked, and broken timbers scattered all around. The gas prevents any attempt to recover the bodies at present. The work will be delayed for months. No blame is said to be attached to the contractors. It is believed that the white men who were taken from the tunnel will live, but several of the Chinamen who were brought out are fatally injured. The scene of the disaster is almost on the top of the Santa Cruz Mountains, in a region where coal-oil abounds, and where boring for wells is actively prosecuted. There is a vein of oil running right through the tunnel, and the soil can be ignited in places and will burn freely. Explosions of gas, and fires resulting therefrom, have been of frequent occurrence there, and have already resulted in the loss of several lives. The utmost precaution has been necessary in working there, and only by the use of air-compressors has progress been possible. It is expected, however, that with a clear tunnel the natural current of air will be sufficient.

AN OLD REBEL CRUISER SUNK.

THE STEAMER SHENANDOAH LOST IN THE INDIAN OCEAN—HER FAMOUS PIRATICAL CRUISE.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The former Confederate cruiser Shenandoah has sunk off the Island of Socotra, in the Indian Ocean. The date of the disaster is unknown. Most of the crew were drowned. The Shenandoah belonged to the Sultan of Zanzibar.

Next to the pirate ship Alabama, the Shenandoah was the most famous of the rebel privateers which preyed on the commerce of the North during the late war. She was built at Glasgow, Scotland, and launched under the name of the Sea King. On Sept. 20, 1864, she was purchased for the Confederates, and after being fitted out, cleared for Matamoros. At Madeira she met the steamer Laurel, which had previously sailed from Liverpool with a cargo of war materials, and officers and men for the Shenandoah. These were transferred to the rebel ship, which then began her piratical career. She subsequently went into Melbourne, and there strengthened her armament, departing from that port in February, 1865. On the 28th of July, in that year, intelligence was received in New-York that the Shenandoah had destroyed eight whaling ships in the Arctic Seas. This news came by way of San Francisco, where it was brought by the bark Minnie, which had been spared from destruction in order that she might take the crews of the burned vessels to the United States. This and subsequent reports of the ravages worked up this scourge of the seas created intense excitement and anxiety throughout the New-England whaling ports. Hostilities had long before come to an end, but still reports continued to arrive of the Shenandoah's destructive work. Her Captain, it was said, had been told of Lee's surrender, but refused to believe it, and consequently continued his cruise. Finally, on Nov. 6, 1865, the rebel pirate ship arrived at Liverpool, and was there given up by her commander to the British authorities. Her officers and crew, numbering 133 men, were allowed to depart without punishment, and after some delay the Shenandoah was surrendered to the Consul of the United States at Liverpool. She was subsequently the subject of almost as much diplomatic corre

A correspondent at Constantinople reports that there is reason to believe that Russia has recommended the Sultan to introduce the reforms stipulated by the Berlin treaty without delay, and that this action is approved by all the European Ambassadors.

A Berlin correspondent telegraphs as follows: "The St. Petersburg Nouvelle Presse, discussing the prospects of war, says neither the Russian people nor the Russian Government wish for war, because the bad financial state of the Empire enjoins peace, but every day and every hour the conviction deepens that a great struggle is soon to break out."

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

FOREIGN BUSINESS INTERESTS.

REVIVAL OF ENGLISH TRADE—THE SMYRNA FRUIT CROP.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The Daily Telegraph, in its financial article this morning, says that the smallness of the withdrawals of bullion from the Bank of England is due to the fact that bonds are going to America instead of gold.

The spinning mills at Kirkcaldy, Scotland, have begun work on full time, having been operating on the short-time system for nearly two years. The linen trade has also improved so much that all the power-loom manufactories are now in full motion, which has not been the case for three years.

The Daily Telegraph, in its financial article respecting the sale of the Great Western Railroad of Canada, now in course of foreclosure proceedings, says it is understood that Mr. Baxter will sail again for New-York on the 4th of December, with first mortgage bonds ready to complete the sale and transfer of the road.

The strike of the 2,000 reelers of the York-Street Spinning Company at Belfast for an advance of wages has terminated.

STOCKHOLM, Nov. 18.—The Hotors Hammarby Company has failed. The liabilities of the company are given at 7,000,000 crowns.

THE GAYLOR OPERA COMPANY.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 18.—Inquiries among the musical people here throw doubts on the report that Frank O. Gaylor left the Gaylor Opera Company at Lafayette, Ind., taking with him $2,500, and not having paid salaries. R. E. J. Miles, Manager of the Grand Opera-house, who knows what business the company was doing, says it has not taken in that much money at its doors of the season, and Gaylor Savior was lucky if he had enough money to bring him to New-York. The manager of Hesek's Opera-house, where the company played here two weeks ago, says it paid its bonded because of the dangerous illness of Mattie Vickers, the star, and that it was not making money fast enough to accumulate the amount named.

THE PROPOSED FRAUD IN MAINE.

REPUBLICANS DENIED PERMISSION TO SEE THE RETURNS—PROTESTS BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

AUGUSTA, Nov. 18.—A large number of Republican Senators and Representatives supposed to have been elected at the last election applied to the Council to-day for permission to examine the returns, but that body, being engaged, took the application into consideration. The impression is gaining ground that the majority of the Council will prevent the Republicans from seeing the returns until at least a part of the 20 days has passed. It is known that the returns have all been tabulated, and that these tables have been submitted with the report and accepted, but the tables themselves are not on file, but are in possession of a committee, who do not consider them a part of the record. It is stated that the committee will submit its final conclusion after the 20 days have elapsed for correcting errors in the returns. There is very little excitement, and the Republican leaders claim that a conspiracy will yet be attempted, though a temporary halt in operations has been ordered.

The situation here is virtually unchanged. The examination of the returns by the Republican Committee and legal advisers of persons claiming to be Senators and Representatives elect has not yet been allowed. Some correspondence has taken place, and the councilors have been waited upon, but no permission to examine the returns has yet been granted. Republicans to-night aver that they will not be permitted to see the returns, and counsel for persons claiming to have been elected in disputed districts protest earnestly against not being allowed an immediate examination of the returns. Members of the Council, on the other hand, declare that no one, excepting members of the Council, shall inspect the returns. The Republicans claim that the Democrats, having an opportunity to examine the returns, have also had a chance to correct all errors on their side in advance of the returns being officially opened.

It is generally understood to-night that a resort to judicial process will be had to test at the outset the preliminary question, whether those claiming to be elected as Senators and Representatives have not the right to an examination of the returns, as an essential step preparatory to the application for corrections.

GEN. GRANT IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 18.—This being Gen. Grant's last day in Chicago during his present visit, he has been kept busy. At noon the Loyal Legion of the Chicago Commandery gave him a lunch at the Chicago Club's house, and voted him into membership of that society by acclamation. Gen. Sheridan and other prominent Army officers were present, and also about 20 members of the Loyal Legion from Milwaukee. The General remained at the house of his son, Col. Fred. Grant, from 2 until 5 o'clock. At 8 o'clock he went with a number of citizens to visit the Protestant Orphan Asylum in Michigan-avenue. From 5 to 7 o'clock Gen. Grant and Mrs. Grant were the guests of Gen. Sherman and wife at their residence.

During the evening Gen. Grant was present at McVicker's Theatre to witness the performance, by the Maretzek Opera Company, of the new and satirical opera, American opera, "Sleepy Hollow," written by Mr. Maretzek. The entertainment was under the auspices of the Second Regiment. Every seat in the House was occupied. The Second Regiment and its guests, who numbered several hundreds, and a majority of all others in attendance, were in full dress. The decorations inside of the theatre had been under the supervision of Mr. McVicker. On the right of the stage, Gen. Grant and Joseph Medill, William Henry Smith and C. R. Farwell occupied one box, while Gen. and Mrs. Sheridan with Mrs. Grant and friends occupied a box on the left. Gen. Grant's box was decorated by the Owl Club with the national colors in silk, representing the front of a tent, with the files thrown back and three owls perched on top. Over the stage hung the word "Grant," in large letters composed of flowers. Every available place was decorated. Gen. Grant's appearance at 8 o'clock was the signal for hand clapping which lasted during his progress from the entrance to his box.

THE UTE INVESTIGATION.

DENVER, Col., Nov. 18.—Dispatches received here from Los Pinos, dated Nov. 17, indicate that the Peace Commission is making slow progress. Only a short session was held on Monday, Ouray failing to come in until 12 o'clock. When he did come, contrary to his custom, he wore his Indian clothing. He was very sullen, and indicated a decided ill-feeling toward Gen. Adams, who he said was incompetent as a Commissioner because, as Ouray alleges, of this knowledge of the Utes and their affairs. Ouray maintained that Jack had done nothing wrong but had failed to come to Los Pinos on a warrant of ill-feeling toward the members of his tribe. Ouray proposed that Gen. Adams be recalled, and stated his desire to go with a number of the chiefs to Washington to lay the matter before Secretary Schurz. The escort of military arrived at Los Pinos yesterday, many of them with frozen feet having come through a severe snow-storm. The Commission will remain a few days longer at Los Pinos, and will come there to Denver, here to take the testimony of the officers engaged in the Milk River fight, and will then proceed to Washington.

THE TOOMBS DISPATCH VERIFIED.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 18.—The editor of the News has verified the correctness of the dispatch received from Gen. Robert Toombs, of Atlanta, Ga., on Nov. 12. The dispatch as received has been compared with the original, and is found to be correct in every word; hence there was no garbling in transmission. The closing sentences are: "He (Gen. Grant) "fought for his country honorably, and won. I fought for mine, and lost. I am ready to try it over again. Death to the Union!"

THE RECORD OF ACCIDENTS.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Nov. 18.—An eastward-bound milk and way train on the Erie Railroad ran into a freight train last night near Greycourt. The milk train's engine, No. 852, was thrown down a bank, falling on its side. The locomotive was stripped of all its outside gearing and the wood-work took fire and was consumed, in addition to the damage sustained by the collision. It is thought the engine, which was valued at about $12,000, is a total loss. The caboose of the freight train and a car of grain were also destroyed by fire. The road was blocked by the débris for hours. The engineer and fireman of the wrecked engine, who jumped off just as it was toppling over the bank, escaped without a scratch. No one was hurt.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Nov. 18.—Adam Forshock, a carpenter, age 65 years, was instantly killed to-day on the track of the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad, one mile west of this city. He stepped from one track to another to avoid a west-bound freight train, and was struck and killed by an east-bound passenger train.

FORCING A RAILROAD TO PAY DEBTS.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 18.—Judge Drummond entered a virtual decree of foreclosure to-day in the suit of James F. Scott and others against the Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw Railroad Company, by the terms of which, unless the heavy bonded indebtedness is paid in full within 30 days, the road will be sold at auction and the proceeds distributed among the creditors according to the priority of their various claims.

MOVEMENTS OF OCEAN STEAMERS.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 18.—The Inman Line steamship City of New-York, Capt. Land, sailed from this port for New-York to-day.

SOUTHAMPTON, Nov. 18.—The North-German Lloyds' steam-ship Weser, Capt. Wiegand, from New-York Nov. 6, for Bremen, arrived here to-day.

HOW DIPHTHERIA WAS SPREAD IN VERMONT.

From the St. Albans (Vt.) Messenger, Nov. 17.

A few weeks ago a family of three children in this town had the diphtheria, but made good recovery. After they had been well and about the stream for two weeks, they went to Fairfield and visited in four families. At that time there was no diphtheria in Fairfield, but since then it has broken out in each of these four families. The question that puzzles the physicians is, whether they carried it in their clothing or by a slight external discharge from the nostrils of one of them.

POSTAL SERVICE METHODS

ANNUAL REPORT OF POSTMASTER-GENERAL KEY.

THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE, ITS EFFICIENCY AND COST—INCREASED SPEED ON STAR ROUTES—AN APPROPRIATION ASKED FOR WEST INDIA MAILS—THE WAR ON LOTTERIES—THE NEW CLASSIFICATION.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—A large part of the annual report of Postmaster-General Key, which was given to the public to-day, consists of statistics which have already been published in the reports of bureau officers. The Postmaster-General renews the recommendation contained in his last report for the enactment of a law readjusting the compensation of railroads for carrying mails upon the bases of space, speed, and frequency, supplemented by the weight of the mails carried. He says: "This would enable the department to designate every railroad in the country by name as a Railway Post Office line, which they all are now, in fact. The only reason why they are not all so called is because section 4,004 of the Revised Statutes allows additional pay for Post Office cars, and so to designate all railroads would "increase the annual expenditures, under the present basis of compensation, by over $1,000,000, and hence the anomaly is presented of railway Post Office lines which furnish apartments in cars only 10 feet 2 inches long by 6 feet 6 inches in width, and of route agent lines upon which entire cars are furnished, 55 feet long and 8 feet 5 inches wide, in both of which precisely the same work of distributing the mails is carried on. The appropriation of $150,000 to enable the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities for the prompt transmission of mails by railroad companies has enabled the department to prevent injury to the service upon the most important lines by allaying the dissatisfaction of railroad companies at the general reduction of 10 per cent, and 5 per cent additional upon their compensation, and has, in several instances, enabled the department to secure the running of special trains of great value to the business interests of the country. I would, therefore, recommend that this appropriation be renewed for the next fiscal year, and that the amount be increased to $400,000, according to the estimates submitted by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. I desire again to call the attention of Congress to the importance of fixing the relative rights and duties of railroad companies and the department in respect to the transportation of mails from stations to Post Offices. Until this matter is settled upon an equitable basis, it will be impossible properly to adjust the compensation of railroads for carrying the mails. It certainly seems an anachronism, to say the least, to expect, because a stage-coach can be driven without inconvenience 80 rods to or from a post-office, that delivery mail at a Post Office, that a railroad company should also be required to deliver mail to Post Offices, when they happen to be within that distance of a station, without compensation therefor. The cost of railway service on the 30th of June, 1879, was at the rate of $67,690,000 per annum, an increase over the cost of the service during the preceding fiscal year of $135,995. This increase does not, however, represent the actual rate of increase in the service, as account must be taken of the reduction of 5 per cent in the rate of compensation from July 1, 1878, made under the act of June 17, 1878. The amount of this deduction is, in round numbers, $400,000, making, with the $135,995, an increase of $525,995 for 1879 over 1878, being a little less than 5.5 per cent. The general increase of business all over the country, and the reasonable certainty that the present prosperity will continue for some years, will require the appropriation for railway service for the next fiscal year to be increased to at least $10,000,000, and the estimate is accordingly placed at that sum. The specific appropriation for railway Post Office car service for 1880 is $1,250,000. Under this appropriation the lines of postal cars have been established where they were most needed, especially in the Southern States, and the increase of the next fiscal year will not exceed 8 per cent. The estimate for this service for 1881 is therefore placed at $1,350,000.

"I most earnestly renew my recommendation of last year for the reclassification of the employes of the railway mail service, as advised by the General Superintendent of that service. No additional expense will be incurred by the change, and the work will be greatly facilitated, and much annoyance will be spared to the Appointment Office, now caused by the necessity of transferring employes from one class to another, in order to avoid exceeding the appropriation. The railway mail service is the most important branch of the postal system. Under a judicious system of appointments and a tenure of office dependent upon merit alone, its efficiency has developed so that the enormous amount of 2,648,661,550 pieces of mail matter were distributed by it during the past year with only one mistake in the disposition of each 3,469 pieces. The work performed by all the employes in this service, varying only in amount, and yet under the present mode of appropriating for postal clerks, route agents, mail route messengers, and local agents, two men working in the same car and performing the same service frequently receive a different salary, simply because one is paid out of the appropriation for route agents and the other out of that for postal clerks."

Judge Key reports that the operation of the present laws regulating the increase of compensation for increased speed and increased frequency of service upon "star routes," (i. e., all those wherein the mails are transported by horses and ordinary vehicles,) results in great injury to the Government. He asserts that these laws, which have been in force for many years, (and which are embodied in sections 3,960 and 3,961, Revised Statutes,) are the sources of nearly all the deficiencies in the appropriations for star service which have ever been created. The estimate for the star service for the next fiscal year contemplates a continuance of the present efficient service in other States and largely increased mail facilities in the States of Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, and Alabama. The total amount asked for the star service for the next fiscal year is $4,700,000, being $900,000 for inland mail service by steam-boats is $900,000.

After stating that the total payments made during the fiscal year 1879 for the conveyance of the United States mails by sea amounted to $196,908, the Postmaster-General says: "The efforts of the department to establish a fast mail service with Havana, via Cedar Keys and Key West, in order to meet the demands of commerce, have failed for several years, on account of the insufficiency of the compensation allowed by law for such service. If the Postmaster-General were authorized to contract for service between Havana and the United States ports mentioned at a sufficient rate of pay to secure the necessary speed and frequency, the commerce of the country would be greatly benefitted. I believe that a general law should be passed authorizing contracts for carrying the mails between the United States and West Indian and South American ports in American-built steamships, carrying the American flag, at a fixed minimum and maximum price, the amount to be expended being regulated by the annual appropriations. Or the service might be thrown open to competition in the same manner as the Star service. The adoption of such a service by Congress would enable this country to control the transportation business with South America and the West Indies, which is now almost monopolized by Great Britain."

The subject of the use of the mails by lottery companies is treated as follows: "By the act of July 12, 1876 (19 Statutes, p. 90), section 3,894 Revised Statutes was amended by striking out the word 'illegal,' preceding the word 'lottery,' and it is suggested that sections 3,929 and 4,041 of the Revised Statutes be also amended by striking out the word 'fraudulent' preceding the word 'lottery' in each section, which will make the legislation more harmonious and effective. It would aid the department in the execution of the intent of the law if the provision of section 2,939, requiring the return to the writers of registered letters addressed to such schemes, were in terms extended to include all letters so addressed. Under the sections referred to, orders have been issued to the 10th day of October, 1879, against 117 individuals or companies engaged in fraudulent schemes requiring the return of registered letters to the writers, and the refusal to issue or to pay to such persons or companies any money orders, and directing the return of the sum indicated to the sender on application. But one of these orders has been successfully contested and its revocation demanded and granted. On the 4th day of October, 1879, upon an opinion given by the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post Office Department, an order was issued to Postmasters directing them in future to mark or register letters or circulars addressed to lottery companies, or to individuals when addressed to them as agents for such companies. * * * Under this order a large number of letters, addressed to a lottery company, or to a private individual as an agent of such company, were held by the Postmaster at Louisville, Ky., and suits were at once instituted by said agent against the Postmaster, which, under instructions from the Attorney-General of the United States, on my application to him, were defended by the United States District Attorney for that district, and, as representing the department, by the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post Office Department. The decision has not yet been rendered in the United States Circuit Court, and I will avail myself of that decision, when announced, to communicate further the views of this department upon this subject. * * * Whether an individual may forfeit his right to use the mail for legitimate purposes by voluntarily mingling such correspondence with prohibited matter, so that the department must accept both or neither, is a question upon which additional legislation might render the purpose of the statute altogether unquestionable. The carriage by the mail of newspapers containing lottery advertisements, soliciting violations of the postal laws, renders the successful enforcement of the statute now in force still more difficult. The department has made inquiry to be made by its Special Agents, and although the details are as yet too incomplete to lay before you, they already disclose the fact that the postal service is used to an almost inconceivable extent to foster and sustain these fraudulent schemes."

Judge Key reports that the law providing for a new classification of mail matter and readjusting the rates of postage thereon, which went into effect on the 1st day of May last, has given universal satisfaction. Such reports as have been received from various offices of the service show that it is better understood by the public than the former law; has served very much to diminish complaint against the administration of the different Post Offices throughout the country; and has removed very much of the friction that existed in the service under the old law. Especially is this true in respect to second class matter. He adds: "The difficulties which present themselves under the old law in determining the boundary line between periodical publications of a general character and those which are designed primarily for advertising purposes have been very materially reduced by a simple regulation providing for the entry at the Post Office where mailed of any publication which had been determined to be of the second class, and the printing of a certificate of entry on each copy of the publication issued. This is practically in accordance with the recommendation made by me in my report for 1877, with this exception, that the entry is only made upon the voluntary request of the publisher or publishers. As an indication of the popularity of this regulation, I call attention to the fact that up to the 1st day of November about 3,500 publications have been entered in pursuance with the regulations, which is nearly, if not quite, one-third of all those mailed as second class matter, including among the number nearly all the leading publications of the country. I am confident that the remaining ones will all, or nearly all, enter themselves, and that when they shall have so entered, the solution of this vexed question will be reached.

"I desire respectfully to call your attention to the fact that there is no United States statute imposing a penalty upon anyone for assaulting or molesting a Postmaster in the official discharge of his duties, as in the case of revenue officers, and I earnestly request that Congress be urged to pass such a statute.

Since my last report a decree has been rendered in the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for the Southern District of New-York, upon a suit brought by Christopher C. Campbell against Thomas L. James, Postmaster at New-York, for relief against alleged infringements of letters patent for an improvement in Post Office postmarking and canceling hand-stamps, granted to Marcus B. Norton on the 14th day of April, 1863, which Post Office postmarking and canceling hand-stamps, it is claimed, have been for more than 10 years, and are now, in general use in all the principal Post Offices of this country. When the suit was instituted against Mr. James the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New-York was instructed by the Attorney-General to appear and defend the suit. The case was tried upon its merits, and was decided adversely to the defendant. The court held substantially that the patent was a valid one, that the defendants had infringed, and was liable for costs, charges, and damages, and ordered an account to be taken of the profits, gains, and advantages which have in any way been received or made, or which had arisen or accrued on account of the infringements, and also of the damages in addition thereto, if any, which the complainant has sustained by reason of the said infringements. Such accounting is now being taken.

Other Postmasters than Mr. James are threatened with suits for like infringements, and there is great danger that they will be subjected to expense unless some satisfactory adjustment shall be made. In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that there is no provision of Federal law to secure certificates of probable cause to United States officers other than Treasury officers, in cases of adverse judgments for acts done in their official capacity. In the present instance, Mr. James, as Postmaster, uses canceling stamps furnished by this department. The court adjudges him to have infringed a patent by such use. The judgment for damages is against him personally. In like cases the property of Treasury officers is protected by law from levy. I submit that similar protection is due to all Government employes when acting to the line of their duty."

The report recommends that the provision of section 17 of the act of March 3, 1878, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General to adopt regulations for the delivery to addressees of the Postal Union of dutiable books, with collection of Customs duties thereon, be extended to embrace all articles of dutiable matter received in the mails from foreign countries. As soon as provision is made for the transmission by mail and delivery to addressees of any article of dutiable mail matter received from abroad, it will be possible for the department to conclude arrangements with other postal administrations for the reciprocal exchange of small objects of merchandise, for which no provision is made in existing postal treaties or arrangements with foreign countries.

The Postmaster-General recommends legislation to enable the department to adopt the general regulation of the Postal Union relative to the payment of a limited indemnity for registered articles lost or destroyed in the postal service.

"This report demonstrates that the postal service call for a large increase in the appropriation for the payment of clerks in Post Offices. The estimate ($2,650,000) for this item is greatly below the actual needs of the service. I have to estimate, however, because I did not desire to increase the growing disparity between the revenues and expenditures of the department. To provide a less sum for the employment of clerks than I have estimated for will cripple the work of Post Offices, and in many instances delay the transmission of the mails."

The free-delivery service is mentioned as having attained great success, very little complaint of the frequency of the service or of the manner of its performance having reached the department of late; but the Postmaster-General remarks that with larger appropriations more frequent deliveries could be secured, and that an improvement, he believes, would meet with universal commendation in the larger cities. A deficiency of about $94,000 is reported in the funds available to pay letter-carriers the increased salaries authorized by the act of last February, and Congress is requested to supply it.

The other recommendations of interest made by the Postmaster-General are, in brief, that Congress should provide for superseding, at the earliest possible date, the mail locks now in use by others of new and improved patterns, for which purpose an estimate of $150,000 is submitted; that the Public Printer be authorized to print a new edition of the Postal Laws and Regulations, to be sold to the public at cost, and that authority be given to the department to contract for the publication of the Monthly Postal Guide for a term of five years.

DISCUSSING PUBLIC HEALTH.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION IN SESSION AT NASHVILLE.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 18.—The first annual session of the American Public Health Association was called to order at noon to-day by the President, J. L. Cabell, of Virginia, in the Hall of Representatives of the State Capitol. Over 200 members were on the floor, and the galleries were filled with spectators. Among the members from abroad were Dr. Rutherford, of the State Health Board of Texas; Dr. Johnson, Secretary of the Mississippi Health Board; Dr. Lloyd Howard, of Baltimore; Dr. Albert L. Gihon, Medical Director, United States Navy; Dr. B. F. Gibbs, Medical Inspector, United States Navy; Dr. Elisha Harris, of New-York; Dr. Rodman, of the State Board of Health of Kentucky; E. L. Griffin, of Michigan; Dr. Choppin, of New-Orleans; Dr. Bonah, of Chicago; Eliot C. Clark, of Boston; Dr. Bush, of the State Board of Health of Delaware; Prof. Peaslee and Dr. Bartholemew, of Lansing, Mich.; Mortimer Burch, of New-Jersey; Dr. John S. Billings, Col. G. P. Woring, and Dr. Bemis, of New-Orleans. An invitation to visit the public institutions of the city, and the Bellevue Stock-breeding establishment of Gen. Harding was received and accepted. In the afternoon session Col. George A. Waring read a paper on drainage and sewerage in cities, and Dr. Eliot Clarke a paper on the city sewerage of Boston.

In the evening the association was formally welcomed to Tennessee by Gov. Marks. The welcoming address on the part of the city was delivered by Mayor Kerrheval, and on the part of the State Medical Society by Dr. E. N. Wight. The annual address of Dr. J. L. Cabell, the President, was an exhaustive review of the sanitary situation of the country, and was listened to with marked attention. Dr. Cabell reviewed at length the appearances of yellow fever in different countries, and the means adopted for its prevention and treatment, devoting full attention to the different commissions that have had it under consideration and the results of their inquiries. He dwells particularly on the cases of Havana and other notable infected points, and reviewed at length the progress of knowledge of public health and legislation in this country based thereon. He gave in detail the facts in connection with the formation of the National Board of Health by the action of Congress, the changes in the bill and the provisions of the act as it finally went into effect. Yellow fever and other epidemic diseases were exhaustively treated. Prof. Gamgee's refrigerating process came in for a share of attention, together with other theories in reference to malarial diseases. Among the recommendations was one that the Secretaryship of the association be made permanent and remunerative.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18, 1879.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $165,916 72, and from Customs, $608,246 86.

All the candidates for the Ohio Senatorship are now in Washington, namely, ex-Gov. Dennison, ex-Gov. Young, ex-Senator Matthews, Gen. Garfield, and Judge Taft.

Notice is given by the Light-house Board that a second class can-buoy, painted with red and black horizontal stripes, has been moored near a sunken wreck (supposed to be that of the steamer Champion) off the coast of New-Jersey. The buoy is moored in 14 fathoms of water, 14 miles east-north-east from the five-fathom bank light vessel.

At to-day's Cabinet meeting additional consideration was given to the choice of topics for the President's annual Message and the character of the recommendations to be made in the forthcoming reports of various heads of departments. Yesterday's decision of the Supreme Court, that the Federal Trade-mark law is unconstitutional, was referred to, and in view of the existence of treaties with several foreign nations under which we have guaranteed trade-mark protection in this country to their subjects, it was agreed that the President should request Congress to enact some law on this subject, which shall be free from the objections of unconstitutionality, but afford protection to foreign trade-marks.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 18.—The annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of the State of Maryland of the Independent Order of Good Templars took place this morning at Elkton Building. The reports show that there are 40 lodges in the State, with a membership of about 2,500.

A YEAR OF GREAT TRANSACTIONS.

REPORT OF TREASURER GILFILLAN—THE GLUT OF SILVER DOLLARS—THE SPECIE RESUMPTION AND REFUNDING OPERATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—United States Treasurer Gilfillan, in submitting his annual report to Secretary Sherman, speaks of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1879, as "a year characterized by great transactions connected with the refunding of the war loans into 4 per cents, and the resumption of specie payments, after a suspension of 17 years; a year of business which has taxed the industry of the office in all the varied duties devolved upon the Treasurer, as charged with the custody of all public moneys received into the Treasury, and the disbursement thereof upon the warrants of the Secretary of the Treasury and upon the warrants of the Postmaster-General." The aggregate of gold coin and bullion, including standard silver dollars, which, being coined under the act of Feb. 28, 1878, do not appear in the statement prior to that year, is shown to have increased from $61,459,426, in 1876, to $114,464,992, in 1877, to $163,969,444, in 1878, and to $222,907,368, in 1879. The decrease in the aggregate note assets, including credits in depository banks on other than loan accounts, is shown to have been gradual, the apparent increase in 1877 being due to the failure of the Army bill to become a law, and the accumulation of funds consequent upon withholding payment to that branch of the service. The note assets ranged as follows in the above-named years: In 1876, $98,419,685 29, in 1877, $107,684,987 64; in 1878, $88,772,800 14, and in 1879, $59,699,090 40. The decrease in the note balance arises from various causes, notably from the receipts for Customs and internal revenue of coin paid out in the purchase of bullion for the coinage of standard silver dollars; from the exchange of notes for gold and the payment of notes for foreign gold received at the Assay Office, New-York; from the purchase of gold bullion with notes and the payment of interest upon the public debt in United States notes, and from the payment of arrears of pensions. The most constant influence in the decrease of the note balance is that which proceeds from the purchase of silver bullion for coinage, thereby depriving the Treasury of an equal amount of note receipts. All the above-mentioned causes of the diminution except this can be controlled by the department. Since resumption, however, the Treasury is deprived by the coinage of silver dollars of the use of the amount of United States notes, amounting probably to 7 per cent of the annual revenues. This percentage is greater than the margin between the public receipts and expenditures, and will in time, without the other influences mentioned, render the balance in the Treasury, first, exclusively metallic, and then exclusively silver.

"The arrangement by which the Treasury became, in January, a member of the New-York Clearing-house," the Treasurer says, "has been of incalculable advantage in establishing resumption, and in saving useless handling of money, and may be made to which the Treasury, without violating its law permitting the settlement of balances in coin to the extent that any exigency may demand. But at present the Treasury membership insures to the benefit of the Clearing-house banks, and unless a change is made in the law, permitting the payment of all or a certain percentage of balances in silver, it may become desirable for the Treasury to withdraw from a relation which renders over $30,000,000 of lawful money in its vaults unavailable for payment at New-York, the point of greatest public disbursement. The decrease of notes in the Treasury continues, and will keep on until the limitation of the issue of the present silver-dollar coinage. The silver bullion on hand has also decreased during the year from $9,634,034 to $4,299,124, on account of the difficulty in making purchases as prescribed in the act of Feb. 28, 1878, at the market rate, which is held by the Mint officers to be the equivalent of the London rate."

Mr. Gilfillan says that since the order of the Secretary of the Treasury authorizing the receipt of the United States Bonds in exchange for bonds, on and after Jan. 1, 1879, there had been received to Sept. 30, 1879, on that account, in legal-tender notes, $92,137,927. A statement of the assets and liabilities of the Government, Oct. 31, 1879, shows the following aggregates: Assets, $274,867,574; liabilities, $128,820,490; current available balance, $151,047,084. Much space is devoted to the refunding operations, the orders issued by the Secretary in connection therewith being embodied in detail. Under the act of Feb. 26, 1879, authorizing the issue in exchange for lawful money of certificates of the denomination of $10, bearing 4 per cent annual interest, payable quarterly, on any three-year bonds, there were sold in the District of Columbia and in the several States and Territories an amount aggregating $40,012,750. The largest sale was by the depository at New-York City, amounting to $3,229,750, and the smallest, $1120, at the depository at Springdale, Penn. The largest daily sale was on May 24, amounting to $3,840,800. The amount of these certificates now outstanding is only $2,868,800. At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, the aggregate value of the United States notes in circulation was $346,681,016. During the year there were redeemed $64,107,533 worth of United States notes of the denomination of the total coinage of standard silver dollars under the act of Feb. 28, 1878, is $45,206,200, of which amount $32,203,358 is in the Mints and Treasury offices, and $13,002,842 is in circulation, being 28.4 per cent of the total coinage. Mr. Gilfillan expresses it as his opinion that the rapid appreciation of silver bids fair to relieve the silver glut in the coining mints. He says there are indications, if the present influences continue, that it may attain nearly its former relations to gold, or at least approach to a parity therewith. Under the provisions of the act of Dec. 19, 1878, for the relief of the Manhattan Savings Institution of New-York, duplicates of registered United States bonds alleged to have been stolen from its vaults were issued to the Treasurer in trust for that institution to the amount of $800,000. Subsequently, a less amount being deemed sufficient to protect the United States from loss, portions thereof have been surrendered at various times, leaving $250,000 now on deposit.

Accompanying the report of Treasurer Gilfillan are statements showing the operations of the Assistant Treasurers of Boston and New-York. At Boston, the receipts are shown to have been $110,005,923, and the disbursements $102,501,116. At New-York, the receipts were $1,089,293,556, and the disbursements $1,183,410,651. In the course of his statement, Assistant Treasurer Hillhouse says: "From the first of the year the flow of coin into our vaults has been constant, while the redemption of United States notes in gold has been insignificant. For some days past it has been found necessary to decline to pay out notes in exchange for gold, the holders of the notes in hand having become so reduced that our whole stock of them would very soon be exhausted if the exchange was continued. A large amount of gold coin has been paid to the Clearing-house in settlement of balances since Oct. 1. It is received by the banks with very considerable reluctance, and every means is used to get it back again into this office. The figures of the transactions with the Clearing-house show an almost unbroken list of debit balances paid this year, amounting to over $238,000,000, the comparatively insignificant sum of $5,000,000 being all that has been received in credit balances. The transactions with the national banks of New-York on account of refunding of the public debt are shown by Mr. Hillhouse to have involved $2,650,688,100.

BENNETT AND MRS. SMITH.

THEIR CASE BEFORE THE COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS IN TRENTON.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 18.—In the Court of Errors and Appeals, the November Term of which was commenced in this city this morning, the case of Jennie B. Smith and Covert D. Bennett, the alleged murderers of Police Officer Smith, of Jersey City, who escaped the gallows by a reversal of the judgment of the Court of Oyer and Terminer of Hudson County, last July, was taken up. This court, in New-Jersey, is the court of last resort in all causes. The mot

NOVEMBER DAYS IN LONDON

GLOOMY ASPECTS OF NATURE AND ART.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN AUTUMN SCENERY—HENRY IRVING'S GENIUS FOR PICTURESQUE GLOOM—SHAKESPEARE REVIVALS—THEATRICAL NOTES.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—Dickens, who never did much in the way of what may be called scenic description, was nevertheless fond of walking about Hampstead Heath. A day or two ago I found there several landscape artists making their last studies of the season. The leaves were falling at their feet. The heather was turning brown. I remember some years ago standing by the well-known firtrees with Gustave Doré when he made an exquisite "thumb-nail" sketch for the book of "London." It is a matter for national congratulation that the authorities have thoroughly secured this vast interesting tract for the public. Hampstead Heath is now under the "Parks regulations," and has keepers and an inspectors' lodge. Additional shrubs are planted here and there; but the natural wildness of the country is generally maintained. There can now be no more encroachments of speculators and builders. The Heath is dedicated to recreation and to art. To-day the November winds blow wild and free over its waving grass, its brown bracken, and its prickly furze. Norman Shaw, the architect of old English and Gothic revivalism, is dotting the country on what may be called the Hampstead-town side of the heath, with his pretty designs. Fitzjohn's-avenue, leading up from Swiss Cottage to Hampstead, is a street of modern palaces, and the entire district thereabout is growing up into a model town. This daily growth of houses in the London suburbs has been going on all through "the hard times," though in many districts the "residences to let" are out of all proportion to those which are occupied. I don't know whether it may be called a building mania, but the same may be said of new warehouses, offices, and chambers in the City of London. Whole streets have been rebuilt at an enormous cost, and half the places appear to be unoccupied.

As a rule, the end of October finds London trees bare. This year not only are many of them still weighted with verdure, but they have developed genuine Autumn tints. Hyde Park is quite a picture of forest color, and the emerald grass of Regent's Park is a fine contrast to the yellow and brown tints of the trees. A writer in one of the weekly journals gushes over the positive colors of the Autumn foliage up the Thames, and talks of its unrivaled reds and yellows competing with the pigments on the artist's palette. He has not seen the United States nor Canada; he knows nothing of the maple leaf, nor the sumac; he has not been on the Hudson nor the Delaware; he has seen neither the St. Lawrence nor the Susquehanna. Therefore he knows nothing of Fall colors. I fancy it was this same "authority" who objected to the exaggeration in colors of "Leaves in the Fall," or a plaque hung in a recent art exhibition. The artist was an American, and the foliage was a blaze of sunset, brown and red and yellow, tempered by delicate greens and dark lakes, such as you see in every wood and forest, and on the margin of every American river in the Fall. There is one thing about the English tints which he might have dwelt upon. They are more subdued than the American; there are no violent extremes in them; they are softer, and on a small scale harmonize more perfectly. Compared with an American Fall scene, an English wood or forest is like a tender watercolor, the other a rich, glowing oil-painting. There is something sadder in an English Autumn landscape than in an American one. Your waving leaves of red and yellow flame out gloriously in the sun, like giant shrubs in flower. Ours are usually drooping heavily with a mist upon them. I shall never forget my first Autumnal journey along the Erie Railway, with its miles of forest trees, literally glowing in the sun. Nor would an American of poetic temperament ever forget his first visit to the Dart, the Derwent, or the Upper Thames on a quiet November day. The American picture of Autumn is splendid; where the English is triste, gorgeous where the other is sombre, and there is a bright hopefulness about it which is lacking in the sort of tender solicitude of the palsied dead fall of the leaf in these moist islands.

IRVING AND HIS ARTISTIC ACHIEVEMENTS.

No rival, past or present, I imagine, ever interpreted melancholy, remorse, and death with such sad, weird reality as Irving does. His Mortimer, in "The Iron Chest," is not his least notable creation. They say on this side that Mr. Flockton is going to America to play some of the characters in which Irving has made his great successes, more particularly Charles I. But no other artist can give you an idea of Irving's Charles any more than they can of his Mathias, in "The Bells," his Eugene Aram, his Dubosc, in the "Lyons Mail," his Louis XI., or his Richard III. I observe that Herr Bandmann has been, however, giving New-York an example of Irving's scenic, mechanical, and "business" treatment of Hamlet. I do not know whether the Anglo-German tragedian acknowledges the source of his inspiration on his "bill of the play," or whether he pays the London actor-manager for the use of his ideas; but there can be no mistake about Herr Bandmann having fully indorsed Irving's "new departures" in mounting "Hamlet" for New-York. The flattery of imitation has often been insisted on. In this case the London artist should rate highly the compliment Bandmann has paid him, for the German has shown in that only they understand our great dramatist, and Herr Bandmann, like his friend Barry Sullivan, has for many years been a leading interpreter of Shakespeare in the English provinces. While Bandmann's "Hamlet" "sets" and general mechanical arrangements are evidently founded on the Lyceum version, it is more particularly in the grave-yard scene where he has accepted Mr. Irving's work, and he must be complimented on his discernment; for the Lyceum stage story of Ophelia's burial is one of the most impressive scenes on the poetic stage, and certainly the English theatre has never seen a more natural and solemnly picturesque interpretation of perhaps the most touching incidents in Shakespearean romance. Not in all the history of "Hamlet" representations was this scene ever treated before as Irving treated it. This fact is mentioned in Mr. Frank Marshall's preface to the play as Irving arranged it. The church is supposed to be built on the hill above the royal palace, and the procession is seen coming slowly up the ascent just as evening is changing into night. "It was at this time the 'maimed rites' used to be performed over the dead, who

'Did with desperate hand
Fordo' their own life.'

The stars are beginning to shine faintly on the sad group gathered around the grave. Hamlet advances out of the friendly darkness which had hitherto aided his concealment, and he exclaims:

'What is he whose grief
Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wondering stars and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers?'

These words of Hamlet's might possibly have been spoken in the day-light; but they furnish a sufficient justification for the innovation here mentioned. Thus far Marshall upon "the innovation." All the critics at the time welcomed the change and were enthusiastic in praise of the "set," with the procession passing at the back of the stage up an elevated path, and descending into the graveyard through a wicket. The acolytes, the cross-bearer, the thurifer dispensing incense and advancing backward, the men-at-arms, the torches, the chant of the priests, the bell tolling, the distant-sounding organ or orchestral accompaniment breaking in now and then. All this has been dwelt upon, and the entire arrangement recognized as one of those Irving innovations that stamp this versatile actor as a cultured student and a poet in his art. It is in such developments of his taste and judgment, as well as in his professional earnest ness and his thoroughness of purpose, that you may find the key to his unprecedented success in "Hamlet," and his wide popularity as an actor and a manager. He lets neither expense, research, labor, nor trouble of any kind stand in his way. For example, he has closed his theatre for two nights to devote himself to dress rehearsals of "The Merchant of Venice," which is to be produced to-night. He will play Shylock for the first time. Ellen Terry is the Portia. The first and last time she interpreted the various charms of this most difficult of comedy characters was at the Prince of Wales's theatre, when the piece was produced in order that Mr. Coghlan might play Shylock. She was then beginning to "take the town," and her Portia advanced her immensely in popular favor. "The Merchant" is to have quite a unique mounting at the Lyceum. Authorities of all classes have been consulted, and there is every reason to anticipate for all concerned a distinct and unequivocal success. Where everybody is in earnest in such a work, and the chief director is artist as well as manager; where art is the first consideration and money the second, and given the story of Shylock for illustration, even ordinary persons might do something worthy with it. But in the present case Irving will find a congenial part in the suffering but malicious Jew, while Portia, in the most important scenes of the play, exactly fits the peculiar womanliness of Ellen Terry.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

"Unlimited Cash," (founded on "Trente Millions de Gladiateur,") by Mr. F. C. Burnand, is not a success at the Gaiety. This is not the English adapter's fault. He has done his best with a difficult subject. Even Burnand cannot always be expected to make bricks without straw. Mr. Mathison had even a more difficult task than Burnand, for whereas the former had to filter filth and turn it into a pure stream, the latter was chiefly concerned with the adaptation of French humor. "Le Droit du Seigneur," which has only in these columns been noted as a French adaptation of "The Custom of the Country," was rejected by several English adapters as "impossible." Mathison has converted its indecency into harmless pleasantry, and, under the title of "Marigold," the comic opera was produced at the Olympic on Wednesday night, amid genuine manifestations of warm approval. The music is bright and tuneful. Some of the airs are as fresh and catching as those of "Les Cloches de Corneville," and when the dialogue is condensed a little, and one or two superfluous numbers taken out, the new work will be sure to run along with other musical successes into an established popularity. It is said of Mme. Rosavella, the American prima donna who has accompanied Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan to America, that she is delightful in "Pinafore," but not equal to the higher walks of the lyric stage. Gye engaged her, and relegated her from the theatre to the concert-room, where, however, in spite of her pretty face, she did not draw. "But her friends say, for some reason or other Mr. Gye did not give her a fair chance, and it is a testimonial to be proud of that Mr. Sullivan indorses both her vocal and histrionic talent. Mr. George Rignold produces his "Henry V." at Drury-Lane to-night. It is his own speculation, and he expects to lose $5,000 by it; but the glory of a short season at old Drury will be a good advertisement for the country. It is quite possible that Rignold's American fame may turn an expected loss into a gain; for it must not be forgotten that we only began to appreciate "Pinafore" when it had made a furore in the United States.

THE PILOTAGE FIGHT.

PILOT CISCO SUMMONED TO ANSWER CHARGES BEFORE THE COMMISSIONERS.

John W. Stanton, of pilot-boat No. 12, who offered his services to the Germania, on her recent arrival, and who refused, appeared before the Pilot Commissioners yesterday and made a formal complaint against George B. Cisco, of the steam-tug Hercules, who took the Germania in, of violation of the by-laws. Secretary Nash was instructed to summon Mr. Cisco before the board on Tuesday next to answer. The following communication was received from the Jersey City Board of Pilot Commissioners:

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 17, 1879.

D. A. Nash, Esq., Secretary of the Board of Commissioners of Pilots of New-York:

SIR: The board has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 11th inst. inclosing copies of your new by-law, No. 42, and of a letter from your board to the pilots under your jurisdiction recommending a reduction of the rates of pilotage. I am directed to say that the board entirely concurs in the action taken by your board relative to the proposed pilot-tug. No just complaint has been or can be made against the efficiency of the present pilot system of the port of New-York; and we are of the opinion that until it is felt that that efficiency will be promoted by the general use of the steam pilot boats, it would be a great injustice to allow a few pilots to employ a steam-boat for the service, and especially in this true when, as at present, the foreign ocean steam-ship companies combine to exclude the majority of the pilots from plying their vessels, and to confine that service to the few pilots who have been found willing to combine with them against their brethren.

Our by-laws Nos. 24 and 41 will for the present suffice to prevent any such action by the New-Jersey pilots, but should any of them at any time undertake a similar combination, this board may be relied upon to make prompt action against such a scheme. We also concur in the views expressed in your letter as to the pilots relative to a reduction of the rates. The general depression of the shipping interests of the country makes it imperatively necessary that all the charges to be borne by that interest should be reduced to the minimum consistent with efficient service. To this necessity the pilotage rates seem to us no exception. A similar recommendation will be made by this board to the pilots under its control. By order of the board, very respectfully,

JAMES PARKER, Secretary.

On complaint of the British Consul, Pilot Daniel Gillespie was tried with running the British ship Fulicka ashore on Oyster Island during a fog on Oct. 7. The board decided that the accident was due to want of care and caution on Gillespie's part. He was suspended during the pleasure of the board, and his pilotage fees were forfeited.

PRICES OF RARE COINS.

THE SALE OF THE ANTHON COLLECTION BROUGHT TO A CLOSE.

Messrs. Bangs & Co. concluded yesterday afternoon the sale of the Anthon cabinet of coins and medals of the British Empire. The prices obtained for the various objects in the catalogue were remarkably good; in fact, high prices were given for any coin which had merit or rarity. It is quite evident that the taste for numismatics is on the increase, and that our amateurs are well aware of the value of the coins submitted to their notice. The Anglo-Saxon pennies brought from $3 to $2 75 each. The William Rufus silver penny $9 50; an Edward III. gold rose noble, $14 50, which was a very good price; a Richard III. Leadegroat, $5 25; a Henry VII. gold angel, $8 25; a gold crown of the same reign, uncirculated, $6 25; a gold sovereign of Edward VI., an unusually rare piece, brought $25. A very remarkable coin, a double rial of Edward VI., the first dated gold coin, brought $33; a Queen Bess shilling, of rare design, $6 75, while a gold half sovereign, with the Queen in ruff and flowing hair, was sold for $9 25. In the Stuart coins, a James I. gold rose rial, in superb condition, brought $14. The pound of Charles I. (1648,) caused some excitement among the bidders, and was finally knocked down at $35, with the half-pound at $17; the No. 107, Oliver Cromwell's crown, a fine proof, brought $32; a Charles II. medal of the Restoration brought $30; the two-guinea piece (1664) sold for $26 50; a silver medal of the seven Bishops, (1688,) No. 144, $20; a silver medal of the battle of The Hague, (1692,) $13; the coronation medals brought good prices; a George III. and Catharine, (1761,) gold, $30; a Garrick bronze medal sold for $6; a Walter Scott medal, of silver, by Baird, $9 75. In the coins of Scotland, a Henry Darnley and Mary, (1566,) in fine condition, sold for $16 75, and a gold thistle noble of James VI. for $14 50; a Pretender crown, James VIII., (1716,) which would have been circulated if the invasion had been successful, brought $25. In Nova Scotia money, a brass farthing, found by Prof. Anthon, in Halifax some 10 years ago, and unknown to collectors there, brought $10. The handsome figures obtained tend to prove that when a catalogue is honestly made, and the public are satisfied with the authenticity of the pieces, there is no difficulty in disposing of numismatic collections at good prices.

A POLICE CAPTAIN'S TRIAL

CAPT. WILLIAMS BEFORE THE GENERAL SESSIONS.

THE JURY SELECTED AND SEVERAL WITNESSES EXAMINED FOR THE PROSECUTION.

The trial of Capt. Alexander S. Williams, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, for the alleged clubbing of Charles W. Smith, of Brooklyn, at Madison-square, on the occasion of the review of the National Guard by Gov. Robinson, on the 15th ult., was begun in the General Sessions yesterday. The offense charged in the indictment was assault and battery. At the time Capt. Williams was indicted, an indictment for a similar offense was filed against Officer Thomas Fleming, who acknowledged having done the clubbing; but when the case was called yesterday, Capt. Williams demanded a separate trial. After Judge Gildersleeve had taken his seat, Capt. Williams entered the court-room and walking directly to the bar, took a seat. Seated within a few feet of him was Mr. Samuel Whitehurch, Secretary of the Taxpayers' Association, who has achieved some notoriety by appearing as prosecutor against Capt. Williams. The accused officer was soon joined by his counsel, Mr. Elihu Root and ex-United States District Attorney George Bliss. The notoriety given the case in the newspapers had the effect of attracting a large number of spectators, and the court-room during the day was crowded. Assistant District Attorney Rollins had charge of the prosecution. Very little objection was made by counsel for the defense to the jurors called, and in a comparatively short time the following were accepted on both sides: James McFyfe, liquors, No. 35 Clinton-place, (foreman;) Charles L. Schussler, grocer, No. 210 Third-avenue; Henry Gerken, grocer, No. 109 Prince-street; Rudolph Pehlmann, insurance, No. 91 West Washington-square; Frank N. Reynolds, contractor, No. 221 East Seventy-eighth-street; Anthony F. Mahrenholz, boots, No. 535 Broadway; Solomon Stark, dry-goods, No. 11 Avenue C; Franz E. Bean, ice, No. 245 West Eighteenth-street; Gustavus W. Rokohl, cigars, No. 163 Water-street; John M. Goldberg, gentleman, No. 175 East One Hundred and Seventeenth-street; William H. Downs, machinery, No. 256 Third-avenue; and Jacob Schloeder, cigars, No. 146 Second-avenue. The first witness called by the prosecution was Mr. Samuel Whitehurch, the complainant, whose testimony did not vary materially from that already given by that gentleman before the Police Commissioners. He said that he was standing among a number of other spectators, who were awaiting the passage of the National Guard, on the west side of Madison-square, above Twenty-fourth-street; three lines of people were standing in front of him when he heard somebody say "Stand back;" the people moved backward, and witness retreated until he had reached the grass of the Park. Capt. Williams came along club in hand, and witness saw him spring toward a young man whom he subsequently knew to be Charles W. Smith, the Captain's club struck Smith somewhere in the neighborhood of the collar-bone; just then Officer Fleming came rushing up, and pushing himself between Capt. Williams and Smith, struck the latter a severe blow on the head, falling him to the ground; witness cried out "Shame, shame on such brutality," and the crowd, joining in the cry, shouted, "shoot him," [Fleming;] Smith was subsequently taken to the hospital. The witness could not see with what part of the club, or with what amount of force, the blow on the side by Capt. Williams had been given Smith. In cross-examination by Mr. Bliss, witness explained his connection with the prosecution by stating that he had given his name to a gentleman at a Police-station-house after Smith was clubbed; Capt. Williams "prodded" with his club to push the people back, but the crowd would not give way, and evinced a disposition to crush forward; there was a vacant space between witness and Smith, into which the latter could have stepped, had he so wished; could not tell why Smith did not avoid the Captain's club.

Thomas P. Donlon, of No. 213 East Twenty-eighth-street, formerly a workman at Cornell's iron foundry, testified that he was standing between Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth streets, waiting to see the troops pass; Lawyer Hurry was the man who first took action in the case, and he subsequently asked Mr. Whitehurch and witness if they would go through; saw Mr. Whitehurch and Mr. Woods and Smith.

Mr. Rollins—Well, then, I presume you saw Capt. Williams, too? Witness, (emphasizing his words)—Oh, yes, I saw Capt. Williams and Officer Fleming, too; Capt. Williams was at the head of a squad of Police marching in line; Officer Fleming was in uniform; Officer Fleming was playing with a child, and did not appear very ferocious then; [laughter;] after the Governor's arrival at the reviewing-stand somebody said, "Cheese it, here comes Capt. Williams;" [laughter;] the Captain pushed the crowd back toward the north; but it did not seem to get back fast enough; Smith seemed to be getting back as well as the crowd behind would permit him, when Capt. Williams pushed him back by placing the club against his breast; the Captain then swung his club a little and struck Smith on the left side; at this juncture Officer Fleming rushed in and struck Smith on the head with his club; Smith staggered and fell in convulsions, and the people shouted, "Shame, shame; what brutality;" a citizen remonstrated with Fleming, and the latter raised his club to him, but dropped it when the citizen threatened to shoot him; a policeman then brought water for the wounded man, and shortly afterward the latter was placed in an ambulance and taken to the hospital.

The witness was cross-examined by Mr. Bliss. He described the position in which he stood at the time of the alleged assault, and said he was positive that he had seen Capt. Williams "prod" Smith in the chest, and subsequently strike him on the side. He admitted having visited Smith in Brooklyn after the assault, at the request of Mr. Whitehurch, and served him with a subpœna to attend before the Grand Jury; saw Smith subsequently in New-York, but could not tell whether it was at Police Head-quarters or in the Grand Jury room. Mr. Bliss questioned the witness at great length on this point, and the answers were unsatisfactory. As court was about to adjourn, Mr. Bliss asked that, in view of his contradictory statements, Donlon be committed. Assistant District Attorney Rollins objected, and Judge Gildersleeve denied the request, giving it as his opinion that the witness would be in attendance when needed. "Oh!" exclaimed Donlon, as he left the witness-stand, "I'll be on hand, you bet. You need not fear." The court then adjourned.

SHOT FOR A BURGLAR.

A MILKMAN IN A POLICEMAN'S ROOM EARLY IN THE MORNING.

The trial of Policeman Charles O. Dooley, of the Eighteenth Precinct, for shooting James Warren on the 17th of last September, was begun yesterday, before Justice Kilbreth, in the Harlem Police Court. Warren is a milkman, and he had been in the habit of serving Dooley's family, who lived at No. 103 East One Hundred and Twenty-first-street, with milk. Dooley went home early on the morning of the shooting, and finding Warren in his wife's room, shot him, as he claims, under the impression that he was a burglar. Warren was taken to the Ninety-sixth-Street Hospital, and while there, and under the impression that he was going to die, he made a statement to the Coroner, in which he said that he had had improper relations with Mrs. Dooley. Afterward, when he found he was likely to recover, he contradicted that statement, and said he never should have made it if he had not been under the influence of morphine. His testimony in court yesterday he told the circumstances of the shooting substantially as heretofore published, and said that he went into the room to leave the milk, as the man had not been left in the hallway to receive it, as usual. He also denied any improper relations with Mrs. Dooley, and claimed that he did not remain in the room any longer than was necessary to deliver the milk, which was about three minutes. Dooley was also sworn, but his testimony did not vary materially from his former statements. He claimed that he shot Warren under the impression that he was a burglar, and denied that he had any suspicion of improper relations between his wife and Warren. He said he would as soon suspect an angel as his wife. The examination will be continued next Friday, at 2 o'clock A. M.

MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY.

A RAINY DAY FOR THE AUTUMN RECEPTION—VALUABLE ADDITIONS TO THE VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS.

The drizzle of the raw November rain which set in yesterday morning somewhat dampened the ardor for science in fashionable circles, and the attendance at the Autumn reception of the Museum of Natural History, yesterday afternoon, for which no less than 2,000 tickets had been issued, was slim indeed. Possibly a dozen ladies were present, and among the distinguished persons whose carriages lingered for an hour or two near the entrance were Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Stuart, Mr. and Mrs. William Hafnes, Messrs. Howard Potter, Robert Colgate, Adrian Iselin, J. Pierpont Morgan, Joseph H. Choate, Percy R. Pyne, Mr. and Mrs. James M. Constable, William E. Dodge, Jr., Joseph W. Drexel, Frederick W. Stevens, the Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, Charles Lanier, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Auchincloss, Oliver Harriman, C. Vanderbilt, Dr. T. M. Coon, and Prof. Julian, of Columbia College. A few straggling parties of young people dropped in as the afternoon wore away, but, on the whole, the gray-coated sabers were not kept very busy, and the smiling Professors, who, set as cicerons, lounged picturesquely against the pillars, catalogues in hand, and waited for somebody to solicit their services.

Some recent additions to the catalogue merit a brief notice. Of these, William Bradford's Arctic painting, the "Polaris in Thank God Harbor," which was on exhibition here some years ago, has been given an advantageous light at the south end of the gallery. On the same floor, along the eastern wall, protected by railing and case, is ranged a valuable collection of Indian implements, deposited by Mr. A. C. Williams, and half-presented by Mr. Peter C. Cornell. The collection embraces some rare pieces, and as such studies are just now fashionable, forms an attractive addition to the museum. A case marked "M." on the gallery floor, contains the Perkins collection, of which one-fourth has become the property of the museum, and as the visitors ascend the gallery stairway, uncertain whether to proceed, his eye alights upon a magnificent ethnological map of the Pacific and Indian Oceans, prepared by Dr. Blakmore, with the assistance of Dr. Holder.

Two valuable contributions have also been made to the treasures of the Geological Hall. One of these is a cast of the left femur of a fossil reptilian, presented by Prof. O. C. Marsh, of Yale College. It is contained in Case O, being No. 11 of the rare relics of paleontology grouped within that receptacle. Case E in the same hall has been embellished by a fine relief map of the high plateaus of Utah, presented by Prof. A. W. Powell.

The latter completes the list of things absolutely new, but the collection of rare Central and South American birds, embracing the results of the labors of Verreaux and Maximilian, should not be passed without a glance. Some of the specimens, including tufted, festive, and frilled coquettes, sun angels, star-frontlets, star-throats, and flame-bearers, (particularly so called) are so exceedingly gorgeous as to be larger than our Northern butterflies, and scarcely less brilliant and varied in their coloring. A beautiful preparation of the skeleton of the Lestes forficata, smaller than our smallest humming-birds and yet perfect in every detail, should furnish a lesson to American anatomists. It was made in Paris.

AN OLD CLAIM SETTLED.

THE BONDSMEN OF AN EX-ARMY PAYMASTER LIQUIDATE A JUDGMENT.

The bondsmen of Samuel C. Staples, an alleged defaulting Paymaster in the United States Army, who is now dead, paid yesterday to the Government the sum of $8,000 on a judgment obtained against them, thus terminating a litigation connected with one phase of a famous defalcation.

About 10 years ago Staples's accounts were found to be overdrawn and improperly accounted for, but before any definite results in the inquiry instituted were reached Mr. Staples died. The investigation subsequently showed that nearly all the items in his accounts which were disallowed by the Treasury Department were amounts which had been charged against Staples's accounts by James B. Hodge, another Paymaster. Hodge's accounts were shown to be fraudulent to the extent of about $358,000, and he was arrested, tried, convicted, and served a term of imprisonment for his crimes. It is claimed that the greater part of this money was lost by Hodge in stock speculations, and there is a suit now pending, brought by the Government, to recover the money from Polhemus & Jackson, brokers, through whom it is alleged his operations in stocks were conducted. It has always been claimed by Staples's friends that he was not a defaulter, and that the items disallowed in his accounts were the same amounts which Hodge claimed to have paid Staples, but which were in fact, never paid, but merely used by Hodge to make up his false credit balances. Staples's bondsmen were George W. Quintard, of New-York, and James H. Hoy, of Hamilton Cotts. The Government obtained judgment against them and they appealed to the United States Supreme Court, but failed to perfect their appeal, and the writ of error was dismissed and the case remanded back to the Circuit Court. The defendants, however, failed to avail themselves of the privilege of perfecting the record on the appeal and an execution issued against them on the original judgment they satisfied the claim, and thus closed the controversy.

JOHN JANTZEN'S WILL.

The second hearing in the trial of the will of John Jantzen, deceased, a wealthy butcher of this City, was had yesterday before Surrogate Calvin. The testator and his brother Joseph made mutual wills some years ago, each devising all his property to the other. The present will is contested by two sisters, Miss Victorine Jantzen and Mrs. Madeleine Lotter. Miss Jantzen yesterday testified that in 1869 she was promised $3,000 by the brothers for going to Europe, with their aged father, who wished to die at his birth-place in Lorraine, in addition to which they were to bear all expenses; that they failed to supply all their needs, and have never paid the $2,000; that while at Biche the town was bombarded by the German during the Franco-German war, and her brother wounded in the thigh by a piece of shell, and the house was damaged also; that for these injuries the town paid them a small indemnity, and this money was also used in their maintenance. An effort was made by the testimony of this and other witnesses to show that undue influence was exerted on the testator against the sisters. Miss Jantzen, but the Surrogate, at the close of the testimony, expressed the opinion that none had yet been shown.

UNDERTAKERS' GRIEVANCES.

Five undertakers, doing business in Spring-street and Sixth-avenue, appeared before the Board of Health, at the meeting yesterday, to complain of certain alleged grievances under which they claim to have labored for several years, and which they also claim interfere with the prompt transaction of their business. They complained that there were no accommodations for undertakers at the permit office of the Bureau of Vital Statistics. If an undertaker desires to make any corrections on a death certificate he has to stand up to do it. The main grievance, however, arises from the practice of the Bureau of Vital Statistics to hold the undertaker responsible for the statistical information required by the Board of Health to be given on the death certificate. The undertakers, after having had a full opportunity to state their grievances, were informed that the Board of Health would give the matter careful consideration, and if any plan suggested itself whereby the evils complained of could be remedied it would be adopted.

THE ALBION SOCIETY.

The sixth annual meeting of the Albion Society was held Monday evening at No. 295 Bowery. About 60 members were present, and Mr. Edward Driver, the President of the society, occupied the chair. The Secretary reported that the receipts for the past year had been $967 82 and the expenditures $602 43, leaving a balance in the treasury of $365 39. During the past year 29 new members have been added to the society, making the present membership 128. Three members died during the past year—Mr. Price, Mrs. Howlett, and Mrs. Blacker. The friends of each of these received the regular funeral grant, $200, in addition to which voluntary aid to the amount of $270 has been granted persons not members. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: First Vice-President—J. W. C. Dell; Second Vice-President—George Edge; Treasurer—John Coup; Financial Secretary—Thomas S. Griffiths; Librarian—William Stokes; Trustees—Edgar Arthurd, R. Tindall, and E. Weeks. The election of President and Corresponding and Recording Secretaries was postponed one month.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 18.—The funeral of Col. John F. Von Werder took place at 10 o'clock this morning from the Aged Men's Home. The services were attended by the inmates of the Home and a few acquaintances of the old veteran. The Rev. Dr. Deckman, of the German Baptist Church, conducted the services, and addressed the gathering of aged men in the German and English languages. A delegation of the German Society of Maryland attended the funeral. The body was interred in the Aged Men's lot in Greenmount Cemetery.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, rising, followed by falling barometer, cold, northerly winds, backing to slightly warmer westerly, and clear or partly cloudy weather.

It will be seen from a Washington dispatch that any expectations of large purchases of 6 per cent. bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury at the close of the present month are not likely to be fulfilled. While the daily receipts are large enough to warrant the probability of an apparent surplus larger than that for October, there are special disbursements for pensions and interest to be made this month which will require about ten millions of dollars to meet them. The net surplus available for the purposes of the sinking fund is not likely to exceed three millions of dollars. It is hardly to be regretted that Congress should meet without being confronted with a strong temptation to find extravagant methods of disposing of an increasing surplus revenue. It is extremely desirable that a strong expression of public sentiment should be elicited in favor of using the proceeds of a period of revived prosperity for the purpose of lightening public burdens and removing some of the trammels on the development of trade. Equally desirable would be the furtherance of a movement in favor of proceeding to cancel the non-interest-bearing greenback debt before going much further with the redemption of the bonds.

Our special correspondent in Louisiana, than whom no political observer is better qualified to form a trustworthy judgment in regard to the affairs of that State, gives in his letter to-day a very unflattering account of the men and the methods favored by the New-Orleans Ring. The much-reviled "carpet-bag" rule produced no such despicable and corrupt gang as that which now controls Democratic politics in Louisiana. From the respectable portion of the party there comes no emphatic protest against tactics which place unscrupulous tricksters or compliant tools in nomination for State offices, and felons, convicted and unconvicted, on the Legislative tickets of the country Democracy. It might be supposed that the high character of the chief Republican nominees would secure for them the support of Democrats who are alarmed and disgusted at the base uses to which their own party machinery has been put. Of this, however, our correspondent is, evidently, not sanguine. To vote the "Radical" ticket in Louisiana is to incur social obloquy which even the "first families" appear to be afraid to brave, and the only inference from the present state of political feeling seems to be that the State must touch a lower plane of degradation before there will be a revolt strong enough to secure a fair vote and a fair count for the nominees of the Republican Party.

The report of Mr. Gilfillan, the Treasurer of the United States, shows that the balance of legal-tender notes held by the Treasury is constantly diminishing, while the amount of coin is constantly increasing. The most constant "cause of this state of things," says the Treasurer, "is the purchase of bullion for the coinage of silver dollars under the act of Feb. 25, 1878," and he expresses the opinion that in time the balance in the Treasury will become "first exclusively metallic, and then exclusively silver." Up to the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1879, there had been coined $45,206,200 of silver, of which the Treasury held $32,203,358, or 71¼ per cent. The amount in circulation was at that time only $13,002,842, or 28¾ per cent. of the total coinage, which proportions sufficiently explain his prediction in regard to the Treasury balance.

Russia's alleged counsel to the Porte to invite the squadrons of all the States which signed the treaty of Paris to enter the Dardanelles if England does so, has a somewhat comic effect, that very treaty having expressly forbidden her to have any squadron in those waters at all. Such a measure, however, would be tantamount both to an indirect defiance of England and to an implied partition of Turkey, for such a congress of hostile iron-clads would hardly disperse empty-handed, and the disorders of the Circassians in Roumelia are a tempting pretext. Russia is said to be again laboring to equip a cruiser fleet, the difficulty of which lies not in the ships, but in the crews. Native Russians would be almost useless as privateers, and the 3,600,000 inhabitants of Finland and the Baltic Provinces—Russia's chief nursery of seamen, would be sorely strained to man an additional fleet.

A curious illustration will be found in our news columns of the kind of fidelity to party interests which is to be expected from the political hacks whom the neglect of respectable men allows to control the machinery of local Republican politics. Alderman Perley, being determined to use all possible means to improve his chances of election, appears to have caused one of his appointees, who had charge of a Republican booth in an election district of the Twentieth Assembly District, to sell out the Republican candidate for Governor in exchange for votes for Perley. The returns of the district in question, which give Perley 128 votes, his associate on the ticket 49 votes, and Cornell 63 votes, against 122 for Robinson, seem to furnish conclusive proof that Perley's solicitude for the interests of Perley was not entirely without result. The incident suggests not only the unscrupulous selfishness of the professional politician, who is always loudest in his declarations of absolute partisan fidelity, it also points to the enormous power which may be exercised by the mere manipulation of ballots on election day. The bewildering variety of candidates for whom the people have to vote at such an election as last, and the facilities for deceit afforded by the unsatisfactory character of the legal ballots, give an opportunity to political tricksters of both parties to cheat the voters without incurring any of the penalties of law. A good deal of our election machinery needs radical change.

TARIFF REFORM.

There was some "excellent fooling" at the Potter dinner on Monday evening with reference to free trade. Mr. Evarts cast a well-aimed pebble at our sweeping tariff, when he said that he had never been able to discover why imported gold and silver were not taxed, since we produced so much of them at home. There is more in this suggestion than appears; perhaps there is more than Mr. Evarts himself, who is not a man of the clearest convictions on economic subjects, and whose imagination sometimes has more than his reason to do with his utterances regarding them, meant to convey. There are numerous articles taxed in our tariff that are just as serviceable in the payment for exports from this country as gold and silver, and which there is no more reason for taxing, and there are many private interests protected by the tariff which are no more entitled to favor on the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number than gold and silver mining. The guest of the evening on Monday, with a good taste which some of the speakers did not appreciate, or, at any rate, did not imitate, refrained from any expression of opinion as to our peculiar Customs legislation, but he can hardly have been so long in the country as he has been without forming some very decided impressions on this subject. At present the situation is very simple. The United States, with a productive capacity immensely stimulated by the growth of population, and by the extension of the appliances of machinery, now released from the trammels and embarrassments of a fluctuating currency, must seek an outlet for its products. And yet under a tariff constructed on a scheme suggested by the struggling industries of a country just emerged from a colonial condition, our industries find many of the natural outlets blocked.

No one would suspect from an examination of the United States tariff that it had ever occurred to its authors that trade was a mutual affair, or that commerce implied two parties. The people of this country are practically compelled by that tariff to limit their sales to such articles as are so badly needed by other countries that they must have them, though they have to pay for them in gold and silver. They are shut into the markets where the single profit to be made from our cotton, petroleum, provisions, and breadstuffs is sufficient to induce purchase. They are shut out from that far wider range which would be open to them if they could offer the double profit of exchange. And the only compensation offered for this crippling of trade is the stimulated prosperity of certain favored industries at the expense of other industries equally important and at the expense of the home consumer. By a peculiar juggle of reasoning, the protectionists argue that it is necessary, on the one hand, to tax foreign competitors to maintain home industry, and on the other, that protected articles are as cheap here as anywhere, and, in most cases, even cheaper. And there are men who are unable to see the absurd contradiction of the two assertions. The earlier protectionists argued much more simply. They held that our agricultural advantages were so great that we could afford to tax the general consumer in order to build up the then infant manufactures; but they always admitted that this was a temporary expedient for a specific purpose, which ought to be, and would be, abandoned as soon as the infant manufactures were able to get on alone. Now, it seems as if the time had come, if it is ever coming, when our manufactures may be regarded as full grown. If they are not so now, they are not worth the raising; they are foreordained to a condition of perpetual nursing, which is a position so absurd that it only needs to be stated to be abandoned by all reasonable men.

The time would seem to be auspicious for a revision of the tariff. We have no desire to see a sweeping change. We are aware that even abuses acquire with the passage of time a certain title to respectful treatment, and that all sudden and violent changes, even in the right direction, are liable to work unnecessary harm. But it is a safe time to begin. The industries which have survived the rack of the last six years can stand without injury a moderate abatement in the protection which they enjoy. The rising tide of general prosperity will float them past any temporary obstacles which may be thrown in their way by a legitimate reform. And this tide would be greatly strengthened by legislation which tended to open ports now practically closed, and to give a wider range and greater stability as well as activity to commerce. Moreover, it may be found that the political difficulties heretofore existing may be less than they have been. Indeed, there does not appear any necessity for making the tariff a political question at all. The Congress is controlled by only a small working majority of the Democratic Party, and this party is in opposition to the Executive. If there could be found in the ranks of both parties a few energetic leaders ready to enter on this work in earnest, partisan considerations could be disregarded. Neither party could claim any exclusive credit, neither would be exposed to special blame for the results. And in this connection we may say that political difficulties are not the most serious of those which oppose tariff reform. These are of a more vulgar and less respectable character. They arise from the selfish, and, in a sense, the corrupt and corrupting influence of protected interests. The trouble lies, not with the constituencies, but with the lobby, and the lobby has the immense advantage that its work is purely negative. It has not to move; it has only to prevent moving. But there ought to be in the Congress of the United States enough wisdom, patriotism, and honesty to enable the representatives of the people to rise superior to the influences of the lobby on a question which concerns not by any means the few whose profits are protected by the tariff, but the whole country and every industry within its borders.

THE TRADE-MARK LAW SWEPT AWAY.

The decision just rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States against the constitutionality of the Trade-mark laws passed by Congress will be a surprise to many lawyers, as well as a disappointment to the mercantile community. The first of these statutes, passed in 1870 and revised in 1873, provided for the registration of trade-marks and for the recovery of damages in case of infringement. The second, enacted in 1876, subjected to a heavy fine and imprisonment any person who should fraudulently counterfeit a registered trade-mark or deal in counterfeit trade-mark goods. Until about a year ago the constitutionality of this legislation was not doubted. Its validity has been repeatedly assumed, and once or twice incidentally affirmed, by the Circuit Court of the United States. In November of last year legal and commercial circles were startled by the announcement of a decision delivered in Wisconsin, by United States District Judge Dyer, and concurred in by Mr. Justice Harlan, of the Supreme Court, declaring that Congress had no power to legislate on the subject of trade-marks.

This judgment was based chiefly on a consideration of that clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to pass patent and copyright laws. The court referred to the provision of the Constitution relating to commerce, but this does not seem to have been fully discussed or considered either by the lawyers who argued the case or the Judges who decided it. The soundness of Judge Dyer's opinion has been denied or questioned by a number of able lawyers, who, regarding trade-marks as an incident of commerce, and citing the comprehensive meaning heretofore given to the commerce clause of the Constitution by the Supreme Court of the United States, have argued that by this provision ample power to pass a trade-mark law is vested in Congress. The immediate practical effect of the decision was to unsettle the law, rather than to settle it. The judgment was not a binding authority in other circuits, but it, at least, raised a question or a doubt as to the constitutionality of the Trade-mark statutes. Hence, in the United States Circuit Court held in this City, and in that held in Cincinnati, certified cases were prepared and sent up to the Supreme Court of the United States, in order that the validity of the law might be passed upon by that tribunal. These two cases and another one furnish the occasion for the decision which is now made public.

In the opinion, written by Mr. Justice Miller, the two clauses of the Constitution to which we have already referred are fully considered. The court holds that a trade-mark is not an invention or a discovery within the scope of the Patent laws, and that it is not a writing or a product of authorship within the province of copyright legislation. Hence trade-marks are not embraced within the meaning of that clause of the Constitution which empowers Congress to legislate for the protection of inventors and authors. While it was necessary for the court to consider this constitutional provision in determining the power of Congress to pass a trade-mark law, it is tolerably clear that such authority, if it exist at all, must be found elsewhere in the Constitution. The clause on whose meaning really depended the decision of the question is that which empowers Congress "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." But this constitutional grant of power to Congress is restricted to international and inter-State commerce. It does not authorize that body to regulate the internal or domestic commerce of a State, which is wholly a matter of local legislation. The real difficulty in the case of trade-marks is that they are a feature of both inter-State and intra-State commerce. Legislation, then, for the protection of trade-marks must regulate, or relate to, not only commerce among the States, but also commerce within the States. Such legislation, the Supreme Court now decides to be beyond the constitutional powers of Congress. In answer to the argument that the law should be held constitutional so far as it relates to inter-State commerce, the court ruled that there was nothing to show that the trade-marks in controversy were of that kind, and furthermore that "It is not within the judicial province to give the words used by Congress a narrower meaning than they are manifestly intended to bear. To do so, would be virtually to make a law which would be only partial in its operation." The decision does not affect foreign trade-marks in this country, for the court did not decide or consider any question relating to the power of the Government to make treaties for the protection of trade-marks, or the authority of Congress to pass laws giving effect to such treaties. But it sweeps away all statutory protection for domestic trade-marks. The value put upon the statute by the mercantile community is shown by the fact that, notwithstanding the large fee for registration, about 8,000 trade-marks have been registered since the law was passed in 1870. Hereafter there can be no statutory protection excepting that which may be provided by the several States. But State laws for this purpose cannot prove otherwise than unsatisfactory and objectionable.

Because the trade-mark statute has been declared void, it does not follow that the 8,000 trade-marks—many of them of great value—registered under it are thrown open to wholesale piracy. They are still protected by law, and their owners still have legal remedies against their unlicensed appropriation. This protection is, however, afforded by the common law, while all statutory rights and remedies are annihilated by the decision of the Supreme Court.

A LOST ISSUE.

Unless things mend very speedily with the Democrats, they will be obliged to advertise for an issue with which to go into the next Presidential campaign. They had been at a loss for a "good cry" for some time, when Tilden was nominated, in 1876, on the issue that "reform was necessary" in a great variety of directions. And the course of the canvass soon showed that reform was more necessary in the ranks of the reformers than anywhere else. The Reform candidate was accused of defrauding the Government of its legal tax on his handsome income, and several of the Reform leaders, with comical suddenness, fell out of the ranks as soon as it was hinted that with them reform should begin at home. Clearly, the old issue of 1876 will not do for another campaign. No amount of furbishing can renew that worn-out plank of the Democratic platform, and fit it for further use. "Tilden and Reform" did very well as long as Tilden was comparatively an untried candidate; but Tilden and Reform are strangers, and most people laugh when the two names are coupled together. The Democratic Party does not care a fig for consistency, but it needs votes, and it must get them from a people that has always manifested a prejudice in favor of candor, honesty, and fair dealing.

It was widely advertised, immediately after the last Presidential election, that the Democracy would conquer by this sign—"Fraud." Tilden was continually posing before the American people, and saying with tremendous emphasis, "The American people will never condone fraud! Never! Never!" As they never have, and never will, condone Tilden, it is certain that he was right in his assertion, though not exactly in the way in which he meant to be understood. Preparations for a "Fraud" campaign on the largest scale were made as soon as the Democrats got control of Congress. The committee to which Mr. Clarkson N. Potter was kind enough to give his name was designed to collect material for the next succeeding campaign. It was on this platform, and this alone, that the Democrats laid out their plan of battle. The hand of Tilden was here perceptible. If the cry of "Fraud" was not raised, and that continually, he had no place before the country. In a canvass with any other issue, he would soon be dropped out of sight. His cause was thus made the cause of his party. Let us hope that our Democratic friends like the result. They have chosen their issue, or Mr. Tilden has chosen it for them, and they have not carried a single State on the sole question which they have raised. If the returns of the elections in the current year have any meaning, they do not mean that the American people care very much about the patent issue invented by the Tildenites and taken up by unsuspicious Democrats who do not care for Tilden.

Not only were drafts from Tilden's barrel sent into the States of Maine, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, but instructions as to the cry to be raised were also sent with them. This is evident from the tone of the canvass imparted by Democratic speakers. The voters of California were invited to say, in thunder tones, that they would never, never condone fraud. They gave such answer as might be expected from an intelligent people who had been the keenly-interested spectators of the attempt to buy the Electoral vote of the State of Oregon for Tilden. In like manner, the Democratic speakers who poured into Maine raved about "the great fraud which had been committed in the name of liberty," and the people of the Pine-tree State, who have an independent way of doing their own thinking, responded by giving the Republican candidate a handsome plurality, and by electing a decided Republican majority to the Legislature. If the Democrats who cry "Fraud" in order that they may familiarize the people with its commission, are prepared to steal the Legislature of Maine, as they attempted to steal the Presidency of the United States, the country will have one more evidence of the hollowness of their pretensions. Nor is it necessary to go through the several States in which elections have been lately held, to show how absolutely the people have refused to pay the least attention to the false and fraudulent issue raised by the Democrats. Either they do not believe that any fraud has been committed, or they believe that the Democrats are the guilty party.

Since, then, the faded humbug of "Reform is necessary," the fraud issue, and the weak attempt to scare the country with a spectre of a soldier at the ballot-box have each and all proved unavailing, it must be admitted that the business outlook (if we may adopt a current phrase) is not very flattering for the Democrats. It is imperatively needful that they should fix up some kind of a cry for the next campaign. They cannot go before the country on their record. They have nothing of that variety but their record in the last session of Congress; and if one wants to rouse the indignation of the average independent citizen and tax-payer, let him mention the work and temper of the session to that man, and he will see what a by-word and a scoffing the Democratic Party contrived to make of itself.

The most signal failure ever made in modern politics is undoubtedly the collapse of the so-called Fraud party. "Let the people speak!" was the constant cry of the demagogues, who were confident that they had really succeeded in making people believe that a great fraud had been committed in the failure of Tilden to reach the Presidency. Well, the country has spoken quite generally and decidedly. It is true that the Democrats have carried Kentucky, Mississippi, and Maryland. These States are usually reckoned safe for the Democratic Party as long as that party has control of the shot-guns and the ballot-boxes. These "victories" prove nothing for the efficacy of the Fraud issue, and the party is left, at the end of the year, without an able-bodied issue.

THE LAST OF THE WHIGS.

There was recently found in an unfrequented part of the Adirondack forest the remains of a man who had apparently been dead for several years. It is by no means uncommon for the deluded victims of the late Rev. Mr. Murray to lose themselves in the Adirondack region and to perish of hunger and exposure, but the skeleton of such a person can always be recognized by the empty flask and complicated fishing and hunting gear which are found by its side. The remains found last week, however, belong to a man who took no interest in hunting or fishing. Near him were found a blue coat with brass buttons, shaving materials, a box of shoe-blacking and a brush, thirty-eight cents in money, two small padlocks, and a tall silk hat. No man thus wondrously arrayed has visited the Adirondacks for hunting or fishing purposes within the last ten years. There are many different kinds of lunatics, but the kind of lunatic capable of carrying shaving and shoeblacking materials into a trackless forest, or of wearing a blue coat with brass buttons and a silk hat in regions inhabited only by wild cats and other uncultivated beasts, does not at present exist. We need not wonder that the blue-coated remains are described by the press as an "Adirondack Mystery." Who this man was, and what he was doing in the forest, certainly constitute to the superficial mind a dark and painful mystery, but it is one which can be readily solved by careful and intelligent investigation.

That the unfortunate man was an Old Line Whig there can be but little doubt. He wore the badge of his party—the historic blue coat and brass buttons, which, when flaunted by Daniel Webster, served as a banner around which the "respectability and decency" of the country rallied. His blacking-brush and shaving materials were part of his Whig character. There was nothing coarse and Democratic in his habits. To be neatly shaved and to have his boots blacked were two of the cardinal points in the political faith of the Old Line Whig. He was never seen without his blue coat, or with an unshaven beard, and grey and dusty boots. If he ever went into the woods, no matter for what purpose, his coat, his hat, his blacking-brush, and his shaving materials, went with him. Thus equipped, Daniel Webster was accustomed to go trout-fishing, and in this costume Gov. Briggs, while yet a small boy, drove the parental cows to pasture, and gathered blackberries among the Berkshire Hills.

Not only was the Adirondack corpse an Old Line Whig, but he was obviously the editor of a Whig newspaper. That he was an editor would naturally be suspected from the fact that he had only thirty-eight cents in his pocket, but the two small padlocks that he had with him proves indisputably that he was a Whig editor. The Whig editor usually wore from one to three patent padlocks on his mouth, as a hint from his Southern brethren to avoid saying anything unpleasant concerning the "peculiar institution." When this particular Whig editor went into the wilderness—doubtless in disgust at the disappearance of his party and the election of that coarse Western person, Mr. Lincoln—he either wore his padlocks from force of habit, or he took them with him because old associations had endeared them to him. In all probability, he also carried the scissors and paste-brush with which he was accustomed to write his powerful leading articles, and a more careful search may yet result in the recovery of those articles. If we assume that he was dazed by the suddenness with which his party vanished when Mr. Pierce was elected, and subsequently mortally wounded in his finest feelings by the election of the Illinois rail-splitter, we can easily understand that he wandered away into the Adirondack forest in order to die—with his boots neatly blacked—far from the haunts of Abolitionists and Democrats.

When Mr. Hayes assumed the Presidency he evidently knew that the last survivor of the Old Line Whigs had mysteriously disappeared, and he hoped to find him. This is clearly what he meant when he mysteriously hinted that he intended to resurrect the Whig Party. People wondered where he expected to find his Old Line Whig, but they did not know that the President by some means had become possessed of a clue to him. It will be remembered that Mr. Wheeler, a gentleman who at one time was supposed to have some connection with the Administration, went into the Adirondack forest soon after Mr. Hayes entered the White House. Since then the same Mr. Wheeler has spent the greater part of his time in the Adirondack region, ostensibly for the purpose of fishing, though it has yet to be established that he has ever caught a fish. His real object is now clear. He was searching for the missing Old Line Whig. Had he found him, he would at once have carried him to Washington, where his blue coat and brass buttons would have given a powerful support to the Administration, and would have enabled Mr. Hayes to proudly boast that he had resurrected the Whig Party and made it the main-stay of the Government.

Alas! Mr. Wheeler was too late. The last Old Line Whig had succumbed to hunger, cold, exposure, and the lack of Boston society, probably before Mr. Hayes's inauguration. When he was accidentally found, his blue coat was ruined beyond redemption and his brass buttons were black with rust. He is totally useless for political purposes, but it is a sad satisfaction to know that the very last Old Line Whig has ceased to exist, and that all projects for his revival will be henceforth hopeless.

The Gazetta d'Italia, one of the ablest of the Italian journals, publishes the following clear and accurate account of American politics: "Our readers may remember that the election for Presidents of the United States is accomplished by an indirect vote. All the electors vote for delegates, who in their turn choose the President. As we have recently said, the new President is to be elected in June of next year, and the agitation for the selection of delegates has already become lively. Several public meetings for this purpose have been held in New-York. The opposing parties are two—the Republicans, who wish to maintain the present order of things, known popularly as the machine, (la macchina,) and the Democrats who desire to make broad and radical changes in this machine which they believe to be too old and worn out." It is exceptional to find in a European newspaper such a thorough comprehension of the great questions at issue between our two political parties.

The efforts now making to excite the Afghans of Kohistan against the English, are a fair specimen of the way in which rebellions are kindled in the East. Among fierce and bigoted men, grossly ignorant and childishly credulous, accustomed to act upon the first impulse, without any fixed plan, it suffices to spread a report that their religion has been insulted, or their nationality outraged. No matter how groundless or how extravagant such a suspicion may be, it is certain to be implicitly believed, and formidably avenged. In 1838, the introduction of a new cap into an Anglo-Indian regiment was declared by some mischief-maker to portend a compulsory change of religion, and the whole regiment mutinied forthwith. In 1857, an unfounded rumor that the cartridges served to the native troops were greased with beef-fat—the deadliest of all defilements to a Hindu—gave the rebel leaders thousands of their best recruits. A still more striking instance occurred in Russian Turkestan a few years ago. Small-pox having declared itself in the Sokhariote town of Kattagurgan, the Russian authorities gave orders for the vaccination of all the inhabitants. It was rumored that this was a device for marking those who were to be drawn as soldiers, and this absurd fable excited 10,000 men to a furious riot, which cost the lives of the prattling doctor and his chief assistant, and was only quelled after considerable bloodshed.

Many of our readers will recollect a beautiful passage of Ruskin descriptive of the common coaster and her crew. The great word-painter tells, in his own masterful way, how the hardy toilers of the deep go out, without lament between the two skeletons of pier-head, vocal with wash of underwave, into the gray twilights of tumbling brine; and then how they roll and stagger far away amid the wind and salt sleet, "from dawn to dusk and dusk to dawn, winning day by day their daily bread." Not without some analogy to this perilous bread-winning is the life of the men engaged in the pilot service of New-York. It is true that for the "slacked rope, and patched sail, and leaky hull," they have a craft stanch in every timber and with every sheet and rope and spar well tested. Their craft is the same picturesque figure, however, as Mr. Ruskin's coaster, whether furrowing the Winter sea under reefed mainsail in search of an incoming steamer or lying too under the friendly lee of one of those melancholy ocean tenements—a light-ship. How long, however, will they be the same picturesque figures that they now are upon our waters? Already the change has been begun, and by and by the graceful pilot-boat will no longer move with wet sails, but with throbbing engines. A few of the pilots have applied steam power in the propulsion of their boats, and there is a great clamor among their brethren of the association, who invoke the Pilot Commissioners to suspend the licenses of the innovators. But after all, will the suspension of a few licenses suffice to stay a progressive step, provided it appears to be necessary or desirable? This is pre-eminently a time when the progress of the world is concurrent with "the process of the suns," and when the practical and useful in life must have full sway. If, therefore, it appear that the introduction of steam power into the pilot service of New-York be necessary, or in the matter of utility superior to the present system, the adoption of the plan can only be retarded, not prevented. The best that can be done at present is to confine the innovation to such limits that the great body of the pilots who are unprepared for it may not be prejudiced.

In a cable dispatch received the other day from London, it was stated that the British Government had obtained information to the effect that the Fenians in this country had made offers of money and arms to the Irish tenant farmers to enable them to resist evictions. The Irish Executive, it was said, credited the statements that such offers had been made, but did not believe that anything would come of the matter. This, however, may depend in a great measure on the temper of the tenant farmers themselves. While they are counseled by the agitators to bear themselves peaceably, they are advised, on the other hand, to follow a line of conduct with which a peaceable demeanor does not appear to be compatible. "Pay no rent," they are told, unless their demands for a reduction are complied with, and then, should eviction, the logical consequence of such refusal to pay, be attempted, they are advised to hold the land at all hazards. This certainly does not read like an ultimate reliance on moral force. In connection with the theory of a possible armed resistance to eviction, a statement which appears in the Ironmonger, an English trade journal, is of more than common interest. It is to the effect that at present Enfield and Snider rifles are scattered broadcast over Ireland. The Ironmonger is informed, it says, by a leading ironmongery house in Dublin that Enfield muzzle-loaders and Snider rifles (cast-off Army stores) are being sold in the capital of Ireland at 6s. each, and that they are being imported in cases containing each 250 rifles. It also says that large quantities are being imported into the North of Ireland, via Dundalk, and it quotes its Belfast correspondent as stating that he had handled some of a lot which were being carted from a steamer to one of the railway termini, and that they seemed to him in every respect perfect weapons. The Ironmonger also calls attention to an advertisement in a Sheffield paper quoting these guns at 6s. each. On the other hand, the Irish journals which favor the land agitation deny these allegations, and quote several prominent ironmongery firms throughout the country who discredit the statements of the English trade journal.

The Danish Minister of War, Gen. Hoffman, has been compelled to give in his resignation because he said in a public speech that, in a war between Russia and England, Russia would, no doubt, occupy Copenhagen. The idea of defending St. Petersburg not at Kronstadt, but in the Sound, and excluding England from the Baltic by closing the three channels by which it connects with the Kattegat, is by no means new. At the outbreak of the Crimean war the question was ventilated both in London and St. Petersburg, and it was only a regard to the Danish King which prevented any measure from being taken. But it is the first time that the subject has been broached in public, and the sensation thereby produced seems to be intense. A closing, however, of the Sound, the Great and the Little Belt against England does not concern Denmark alone. It would be as serious an affair to Sweden, and it would give a fatal blow to the commerce of the German ports of the Baltic, Dantzic, Stettin, Rostock, and Lubeck. Thus Russia will probably have to think the matter over twice before she acts, and the utterance of the Danish Minister, seemingly so uncalled for, was probably a premeditated hint to put all concerned on their guard.

All these things are done differently in Paris. If the press of New-York were to give a fair for any charitable purpose, can we, without a violent wrenching of the imagination, suppose for an instant that a bull-fight and a masquerade on horseback would be its principal features? Yet these are among the spectacular diversions originally proposed for the fête the Paris journalists are to give at the Hippodrome this week for the relief of the sufferers by the inundations in the Murcia region of Spain. The President of the Republic and his grave Ministers decided, however, that the bull-fight, notwithstanding its appropriateness, nationally considered, must be stricken from the programme. The carrousel in the afternoon will be a brilliant spectacle, that is, if the journalists themselves succeed in their attempt to "rule the wild Gallic steed with jagged bit." We can faintly imagine the sensation some of the esteemed editors of some of our esteemed contemporaries would create, say at Gilmore's Garden, if they should, in a moment of extreme forgetfulness, get "onto a hoss." The fête will take the shape of a carnival in the evening, and from the hints of the Paris papers it appears to have been planned very much on the principle of one or two carnivals that have in past years made our streets splendid with pageantry of lager-beer wagons and advertising vans. The really interesting feature of the fête will be the journal, to be printed in the presence of the spectators, under the editorial supervision of M. Meyer, of the Gaulois. Articles are to be furnished by Dumas, Feuillet, Sara Bernhardt, and others, and illustrations will be supplied by Meissonier, Detaille, Vibert, Doré, and other artists of renown. M. De Rothschild was to be asked to supply the financial column. It has been stated that the two pages of advertisements would produce a revenue of 25,000 francs.

AN ECONOMICAL BUREAU.

THE GOVERNMENT SAVING MONEY BY DOING ITS OWN ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Washington, Nov. 18.—The report of Mr. O. H. Irish, Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, for the fiscal year ending June 30, says that the refunding operations during the Winter of 1878-9 caused the largest year's work ever executed by the bureau. There were delivered, finished, 6,877,262 sheets of notes and securities, representing $1,916,790,160; and 13,915,812 sheets, containing 280,240,965 stamps for the internal revenue and Customs services. The expenditures were $829,007 28, of which $642,494 69 was used in executing work for the several bureaus of the Treasury and other departments, to be reimbursed, leaving $171,582 23 as the net expenditure for the proper work of the bureau. This showing is believed to bear out the position taken by the Government that the work now done by the bureau can be more economically and satisfactorily performed by the Government than it was under contract. During the year 1878 there were made upon hand-presses 20,244,490 impressions, containing 3,210,310,870 square inches; during the fiscal year just closed there were made, in the same manner, 36,573,724 impressions, containing 6,032,539,375 square inches. The superficial area of the product of each year, reduced to impressions by a common standard shows that the product of 1878 equals 25,478,900 impressions, and the product of 1879 equals 47,877,200 impressions, an increase of nearly 90 per cent. In the different divisions of the bureau a large increase is shown in the amount of work done, but not a corresponding increase in the size of the pay-rolls. As a whole the increase in the work of the bureau in the fiscal year 1879, as compared with 1878, will closely approximate 90 per cent., while the aggregate expenditures of 1879 exceed those of 1878 only 54 per cent. The object of the comparison is to show that the operation of the system works a gradual improvement in the results obtained, and has placed the bureau upon a strictly business basis. The number of persons employed has been from 677 to 929. Pending the passage of the act of March 1, 1879, changing the tax on tobacco, it became necessary to stop work on all classes of internal revenue stamps for tobacco stamps and to furlough a large number of employes. When the act was approved the demand for new stamps was very urgent and continued so until the close of the year. The chief of the bureau says the results accomplished were reached through a steady adherence to the salutary reforms introduced by Secretary Sherman on the reorganization of the bureau.

A GREENBACK CONFERENCE CALLED.

Washington, Nov. 18.—The following circulars were issued to-night:

Washington, D. C., Nov. 18, 1879.

The National Committees of the National Party are hereby notified and requested to attend a meeting of said committee, to be held at 11 o'clock A. M. on the 8th of January, 1880, at No. 903 Pennsylvania-avenue, Washington, D. C. A full attendance is requested. F. P. DEWEES,
Chairman National Committee National Party.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 18, 1879.

In view of the gravity of public affairs, the imminent peril to representative government, we, the undersigned, Chairmen of the Congressional Committee of the National Greenback-Labor Party and of the National Committee of the National Party, hereby invite the Union Greenback National Committee, Chairmen and members of the various State Committees, representatives of Greenback and Labor organizations, editors of newspapers throughout the country friendly to the principles of Greenback and Labor organizations, to meet in conference at Washington, D. C., on the 8th day of January, 1880, the Congressional Committee of the National Greenback-Labor Party, and the National Committee of the National Party, for the purpose of agreeing upon a time, place, and basis of representation of a National Convention, to be held for the purpose of adopting a platform of principles and placing in nomination candidates for President and Vice-President. Chairman of the National Committee of National Party.

THE ART INTERCHANGE COMPETITION.

The Society of Decorative Art gave rise to a small sheet called the Art Interchange, which had had unusual success among art amateurs and people of fashion of this City. The editors of the Art Interchange having offered prizes ranging between $50 and $10 for the best original door-curtains, painted tiles or plates, and Christmas cards, have been surprised by the number and excellence of the entries. The objects offered in competition for the six prizes are on exhibition at the Kurtz Gallery, where they will remain until Friday, when the judges, consisting of Messrs. J. T. Johnston, S. L. M. Barlow, William H. Goodyear, and C. C. Perkins, together with Mrs. William S. Hoyt and Mrs. T. M. Wheeler, ladies representing the Society of Decorative Art, will determine who are the winners. The exhibition certainly shows a marked improvement in the department of household art, to which the society and the bright little paper of Messrs. Whitlock & Turnure are devoted. Without wishing to prejudge the decision of the judges, or to compare one piece with another, it may be said, in general, that there is more originality shown in door-curtains than in tiles and plates, and more in these latter than in the Christmas and dinner cards. TRYING TO OUST KELLOGG

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE SENATE SUB-COMMITTEE.

THE STORY OF A HEBREW PEDDLER, WHO CONFESSED HIMSELF A CRIMINAL, A PRIVATE DETECTIVE OF BUTLER, AND A DISAPPOINTED PLACE-HUNTER—KELLOGG'S DEMAND FOR A FAIR HEARING.

NEW-ORLEANS, La., Nov. 18.—In the Senate sub-committee investigation to-day, Peter Williams testified regarding the election in the Seventh Ward of this city in 1876; Moore, who was declared elected to the Legislature from this ward, told the witness that the Clerk in the Packard Legislature used to answer for members when the roll was called; Moore gave the witness to understand that he could tell a tale about Kellogg's election that would be useful to the Democrats, out of which they could make a pile of money; they agreed to this, but Moore being offered a place in the Custom-house, which he accepted, would now testify to the contrary; Blanchard, who was now dead, gave Moore 300 blank registration papers to use in the Seventh Ward; Moore said the ward went Democratic, but was counted for the Republicans; after the election the registration books were taken to the Custom-house and names were erased.

D. H. Monier, United States Supervisor in the Seventh Ward, in the election of 1876, testified as follows: "The election was very fair; no trouble occurred and no protest was entered, yet Poll No. 3 was thrown out by the Returning Board; nearly 500 votes were cast at this poll, about 170 majority for the Democrats." The witness said the returns had all been made according to law.

Major E. A Burke testified regarding the election in 1876, especially as to the election at Poll No. 3, in the Seventh Ward. His testimony was substantially that given before other investigating committees.

Bernard Williams, an Israelite, native of Poland, testified that he was employed by James Lewis, Naval Officer at New-Orleans, to go to Washington in the interest of Kellogg; when he reached Washington he reported to Kellogg, who sent him, with others, to watch the depot for the arrival of Spofford's witnesses; Kellogg received a dispatch from Lewis saying that the witness was all right; when Delacey, Blackstone, Johnson, and two others, whose names the witness could not recall, arrived in Washington, the witness, at 12 o'clock at night, took them to Gov. Kellogg's room; Kellogg said he wanted them to go back on their affidavits and give testimony for him instead of for Spofford. They stated that the affidavits made in New-Orleans were true, and feared they would be punished if they testified differently in Washington. Kellogg took up a law book and read, showing them that they could not be harmed if they went back on the affidavits. After much drinking and smoking, the witnesses agreed to testify as Kellogg desired. Present in the room at the time were Gov. Kellogg, the five witnesses before mentioned, Conquest Clarke, and two others. Before the bargain was made Gov. Kellogg told the negroes that if he was turned out of the Senate none of them—no Republican—could live in Louisiana; that they would all be assassinated. If they went back on their affidavits they would be protected in every way, they would get $500 each and places in the Custom-house at $90 per month. Big promises, also, were made to the witness, but not fulfilled. Before they left Kellogg's room that night in Washington, he took a large envelope from his pocket and counted out to Spofford's witnesses $500 as a consideration for testimony to be given before the Kellogg-Spofford committee, then in session. It was nearly daylight before this meeting broke up. The witness produced a memorandum made by Kellogg directing him to the room of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections; Charles Cavagnac came to Washington with the Spofford witnesses.

At the conclusion of the direct testimony the witness said he had been hiding all day to prevent them from bringing him before the committee. When asked by Senator Hill for his reason, he said he had been informed that if he came before the committee and testified against Kellogg he would not get his pension; that he was an ex-Federal soldier, had been wounded, and, as there was several years' pension due him, he wanted the money.

Cross-examined by Senator Cameron, he said: "I am a peddler by occupation; during the war I was in Gen. Banks's command; later I was a private detective here for Gen. Butler." To the question, "How often have you been in prison?" the witness became furious, and said he did not want to be insulted. The fact was finally elicited that he had been arrested several times for misdemeanors. He had told several persons in this city before that he had himself to-day because Morris Marks told him if he came before the committee he would not get his pension; there was now about 14 years' pension due him; he went to the State-house about 10 days ago and made an affidavit substantially the same as he had testified to to-day; some time ago he asked for a place in the Custom-house; if he had got it he would not have testified; he wrote to Gov. Kellogg that they would not give him a place, and as he got no answer he went and told Cavagnac everything; he saw Gov. Kellogg yesterday and again last night; promised not to come before the committee, but when he went home at 3 o'clock, after hiding all day, the Sergeant-at-Arms was waiting there, and brought him here.

It being 5:30 o'clock, the committee decided to adjourn until to-morrow morning. Before doing so Gov. Kellogg, by permission, made the following statement: "The testimony of this witness, of course, affects me personally, and I think as a brother Senator, Mr. Chairman, you will allow me to say at this time that I shall ask the committee to give me an early opportunity to call before you whatever witnesses may be accessible now, to disprove the testimony of this witness. This matter is not covered by your resolution, and I may be unable to meet the case as fully as I desire; but, if not, I shall, as it is a personal matter, ask the Senate at the earliest opportunity after it convenes, to institute an investigation which may be both thorough and complete, to the end that the truth may be known." In reply the Chairman stated that every opportunity would be given for testimony in rebuttal.

DAMAGES FOR AN ASSAULT.

The case of Edgar O. Clark against James Burtis, for assault and battery, in which $1,000 damages was asked by the plaintiff, occupied the attention of the County Court, now in session at White Plains, on Monday and part of yesterday. The plaintiff is a resident and does business in the Town of New-Rochelle, and the defendant resides in the Town of Mamaroneck. On the 28th day of last June, Clark had business calling him to the house of Mr. Burtis, and while there, without provocation on the latter's part, he (Clark) was approaching from behind and striking him with his fist a blow upon the right side of the head upon and under the ear, knocking him down, severely bruising and otherwise injuring him. By reason of this assault the plaintiff has since suffered, and is still suffering, great bodily pain, and has been compelled to pay a considerable sum for medical attendance. The defense set up was that Clark was a trespasser, and that the above blow was struck with the open hand, and that his injuries from which he now suffers were from chronic causes. Martin J. Keogh conducted the case for the plaintiff, and F. McClellan for the defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $750.

DEPARTURES FOR EUROPE.

The Guion steam-ship Wisconsin sailed for Liverpool yesterday, and the Gallia, of the Cunard Line, will follow for the same port to-day. Thomas Bayley Potter will be among the passengers of the latter vessel. The departure of the steam-ships The Queen and the Denmark, of the National Line, which was to have taken place to-day, has been postponed until to-morrow. The cabin passenger list of the Wisconsin contains the following names:

John Davison, D. J. Keane, W. E. Horner, John Gray, John Dunscell, E. F. Billings, L. D. Jones, D. Dingle, A. D. Ainsworth, John James, Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Russell, Mrs. Sarah Noble, William Noble, the Rev. L. C. Barre, Mrs. Barre, J. Roswell, Dr. T. M. Bridges, Dr. James H. Letcher, C. Buckles, William Williams, Silva Clapin, Alfred Corin, the Rev. Mr. Crowthey, John McLean, W. Dooley, Scott Thurdien.

A REPUBLICAN VICTORY IN NEWARK.

THE MONTCLAIR RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

The inquest in the Montclair Railroad accident, in which a train plunged into the Hackensack River on the 4th inst., and by which the engineer, Eric Dunker, was killed, was continued, before Coroner Wightman and A. Jerry, at Jersey City, last evening. Michael Mannion, assistant baggage-master, gave the same evidence as Moore, the bridge-tender. Mr. Douglass, Superintendent of the road, testified that he knew nothing of the laws governing draw-bridges on railroads. He thought all employes of railroads should know how to read and write, but he knew Moore could do neither. The inquest will be concluded Thursday evening.

AMUSEMENTS.

FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE.

An interesting performance was given at this theatre last night—interesting in a double sense, as something bearing the Perdicaris stamp and as a fresh novelty which proved to have many elements of excellence. It was generally feared that the new play announced for production would turn out to be of the same family as "The Picture," since the already famous author of that melancholy work was to serve as godfather. Fortunately, this fear was groundless. The play, though it excited more curiosity than sympathy, was far from dull, and the acting of Mr. Joseph Wheelock was of a kind which will be remembered with distinct pleasure by those who saw it.

A few words about the play, in the first place. It is entitled "Self-conquest," and is based upon Wilkie Collins's romantic tale, "The Frozen Deep." The character of the work is almost described by this simple statement. Dramas embodying the peculiar talents of Mr. Collins are, as we have had occasion to remark before, singular rather than strong, unnatural, extravagant, and more especially psychological. The celebrated novelist has his theories respecting the phenomena of second-sight and Spiritualism, and he has made ample use of these theories. They reappear in almost everything that he writes. His speculations color his fancies as effectually as the seasons color the leaves of trees. His most striking heroines are uncomfortable creatures who are eternally looking into distance, through the mysterious obscurity of time, over the hollow voids of space. They are transcendentalists, though not in the sense advocated by the New-England speculators. They are the substantial essences of dreams, visions, sentiments, and spiritual visitations. They are interesting, perhaps, as studies, but as human beings they are bores. Transcendentalism out of the spheres of philosophy and poetry—such poetry as Shelley's—is apt to strike one as something ludicrous; to the average practical man it seems nothing less than pure nonsense. We confess that we look at the subject seriously; from a theatrical stand-point, however, it appears absurd. The adapters of "The Frozen Deep" were not deterred by this fact from making a bold attempt to place the story, including most of its details, upon the stage; and, if the result seems extravagant and overstrained in sentiment, they deserve credit for a partially successful endeavor. The heroine of "Self-Conquest is perfectly undramatic, and awakens neither pity nor sympathy. Such a mingling of spirituality and emotion grows vulgar and dull in the glare of footlights and lime-light. On the other hand, the character of the hero is essentially human and therefore dramatic; he belongs to our comon nature and to the stage. This part is well depicted, and is the life of the drama. Outside of it the latter is worthless. Because the love, the misery, and the self-sacrifice of Richard Wardour appeal to the heart and to the imagination, the story which revolves around him is theatrically interesting. We may add that the adapters have divided their play into four brief acts, and, though the action progresses in the face of clear inconsistencies, and though much of this action leads to morbid and unwholesome issues, the general effect is fairly well sustained. The second act is certainly strong, and the final act is genuinely pathetic. But the third act sounds like a Platonic dialogue on the subjects of medicine and the soul; it is really a combination of moonlight and commonplace.

We can speak more emphatically of Mr. Wheelock's acting, for that was of a high grade, as fine, indeed, as anything we have seen him do. The repressed intensity of his passion, the force and variety of his action, his admirable vigor and earnestness, his fervor, his pathos, his magnetism, all went to complete a splendid embodiment. The inherent faults of his method were less apparent on this occasion than usual, although he made no attempts to conceal them. At intervals his shambling gait, awkward gestures, and familiar manners, threatened to spoil the broad effect of his acting. But he retrieved himself immediately. In the second act, some of the effects which he produced were startling in their spontaneity, and in the death scene, the wild disorder of brain and heart was vividly pictured. Mr. Wheelock is one of the few actors now before the public who possess passion; a vicious method cannot take away this gift, whose holder may exercise unlimited power over the heart. Some of the worst acting we have seen was ground out of Mr. Wheelock's mill; but in his best moments he can move an audience with a slight effort. His Richard Wardour must be placed altogether to his credit, for he carried the play on his shoulders, and carried it successfully. There was on other instance of good acting in the representation, namely, Mr. Cahill's John Want. The part was meagre, and would have been insignificant in most hands. But this actor gave it prominence by making it characteristic. In voice, gesture, and manner this impersonation was absolutely truthful and free from the slightest self-consciousness. If Mr. Cahill's ability can be measured by his John Want, he is an excellent comedian.

All the other members of the cast were weak, not excepting Miss Nard Almayne, who played her part from beginning to end in one key; her face is spiritual and refined, but its expression hardly varies. Her presence is pleasing; her voice monotonous and unvaliatiated. It is to be feared that she is only one more addition to the growing stock of sentimental young women who are now tramping the stage, or, perhaps we should say, floating over it. Their mission apparently is "to weep, and smile no more."

At the conclusion of the play, last night, two gentlemen came forward and announced themselves as the authors; one of them was Mr. Townsend Percy, but the name of the other escaped us. "Self-Conquest" was announced as an anonymous work.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. John White's first organ recital takes place this afternoon at Chickering Hall.

The Philharmonic Society will give their first public rehearsal on Friday afternoon at the Academy of Music, to be followed by the concert Saturday evening at the same place. Mr. Franz Rummel will be the soloist and play the same Tschaikowsky concerto already noticed in connection with the Brooklyn Society.

The second performance of Verdi's "Aida" is announced for to-night by Mr. Mapleson at the Academy of Music, with the same cast as before. The management may reasonably claim for this representation that it is, on the whole, the most complete and splendid performance of the opera ever given in New-York. The leading artists are all thoroughly competent, the chorus and orchestra are in full numbers, and have been well drilled, and the scenery, costumes, and appointments are not only rich and costly, but are appropriate and in good taste. Mr. Mapleson's further announcements are "Trovatore" for Friday evening, "Martha" for the Saturday matinee, and on Sunday evening a second performance of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," which was so successfully given last Sunday night.

AN ALDERMAN TO BE INVESTIGATED.

In the Hoboken Board of Aldermen, last evening, Alderman Schmidt introduced a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee to investigate the rumor that Councilman Webb is the person who was arrested in New-York under the name of Samuel Wilson, and who is charged with lottery gambling. Chairman Crissy declared the resolution out of order. The First Methodist Church, of which Mr. Webb is a member, was appointed a committee to investigate the matter.

INDICTED FOR MURDER.

Thomas J. Brownlee, who on the afternoon of Sunday, Oct. 5, last, in the City of Yonkers, shot and killed George F. Widmann as they were both returning from an excursion, was yesterday indicted by the Grand Jury of Westchester County for murder in the first degree. He has been in the County Jail ever since the shooting, and his trial will probably take place next month.

WINNERS IN A DOUBLE-SCULL RACE.

BARRIE, Ontario, Nov. 18.—A double-scull race, two miles with a turn, for $100 a side, between Gaudaur and Adair, of Toronto, and Humphrey and Paley, of Collingwood, took place on Kempenfeldt Bay this afternoon, and was won by the Toronto men in 14:30. The weather was very cold, interfering somewhat with the sculling.

THE MURDER IN ROCKLAND

TRYING TO SHOW THE REV. MR. HAYDEN'S MOTIVE.

A HARD FIGHT FOR THE ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY BEGUN—WHAT THE STATE CLAIMS—A DEAD WOMAN'S EVIDENCE COMING IN THROUGH A REPORTER.

NEW-HAVEN, Nov. 18.—There was very little in the Hayden trial to-day that was of much interest until the afternoon, when the first arguments were made on the subject of the declarations made by the girl. Mr. Root, the reporter, who had already been a witness, was called to give the testimony which Mrs. Jane E. Studley, Mary Stannard's employer, gave in Madison. Mrs. Studley recently died. It was after consultation with her that the girl first became convinced that she was about to become a mother. Objection was made to this testimony, mainly on the ground that the witness could give only the substance of what Mrs. Studley had said, and not her exact words. After a long debate, the prosecutors carried an outpost, so to speak, and the manner of introducing the evidence was approved by the court. But, with almost the first question, objection was made to the evidence itself, and when court was adjourned the arguments were not ended. The great struggle for the introduction of the evidence on which the case depends has now begun, and the State is trying to establish Mr. Hayden's motive.

When court was opened, Abraham De Silva, photographer, was still on the stand, and Mr. Watrous was cross-examining him about the photographs he had made in Rockland. Concerning the four pictures of the spot where the body was found, the cross-examiner was very particular to secure the position of the camera in each case, and its distance from the place where the body had lain. The picture of the road leading up to the Stannard house was taken, the witness said, from a point about 20 paces south of the stile which led to the spring, and his camera stood over the wheel-track on the left side of the roadway. He couldn't tell how far, in feet, the picture showed the road, but was sure that the Stannard house could not be seen from his camera. A mark was shown on the map, as the limit of the view of the road. "The photograph was taken," said the witness, "not to show just how much of the road could be seen, but to show how secluded the spot near the spring was." When describing the picture which gives the view southward to Hayden's house from a point just south of Burr's barn, the witness showed traces of a worn foot-path leading from the road, and also spoke of one of the fences between the point of view and Hayden's house as having bushes with it so high that one could not see over them. Much time was consumed in the examination of the picture which gives the view northward from the rear window on the ground floor on the north side of Hayden's house. During the Madison trial, Mrs. Hayden testified that after her husband left the house at 2:15 P. M. Tuesday, to go to his wood-lot, she watched him from that window until he had left the road, just north of Burr's barn, and did not lose sight of him until he had gone a short distance in the meadow in the direction of his wood-lot. This picture the State introduces to show what intervened between that window and the route Mr. Hayden is said to have taken. With it are a picture of the same scene taken in Winter and a photograph of transparency of the "original view as now seen," said the witness, "my camera stood outside the rear window on the ground floor, north side, and was on a level with the central lower pane of glass."

"Why did you choose that lower pane?" asked Mr. Watrous.

"Because that was the level of a person sitting on a chair in the room inside."

"But you must have had instructions. What reason was given to you by counsel for the State, why you must take that pane of glass?"

"Well, Mary's object," said Mr. Waller to the court, "to any inquiries which will make the picture intelligible, but now, having the location of the camera, the field included, and the direction, as compared with the map, they have all that's necessary. Now they want to find out what we said to him, or in his hearing, as a reason for choosing that window. To that we must object."

"We've learned," replied Mr. Watrous, "that we can't be too careful in questioning these specialists. This picture is intended to show something, but your Honors know that photographs will sometimes mislead. It is with them sometimes as with the microscope, concerning which my distinguished friend, Dr. White, is said to have remarked, 'If you only bring your imagination to bear, you can see in it almost anything you want to.' We want to see whether this photographer went there with a bias; whether he was instructed to produce a particular result. Theoretically, photography produces an unvarying picture of the same object, but practically it does not do this. If he was told to put his camera so as to show what Mrs. Hayden could do or could not do, he did right in obeying, but we have a right to know what he was told to look Burr-barn-ward from that spot."

"It is now the sixth week of this trial," said Mr. Waller, "and although counsel for the defense have frequently said that experts have been directed by us, we have the pleasing consolation that not yet has there dropped from the lips of any witness, even under severe cross-examination, a single unrepresentative of the State has tried to prejudice or bias him. Now they propose to see whether this witness has stopped the sun in its course and changed the laws of light. They try to discover the State's evidence out of season. The State will show, at the proper time, in chief or in rebuttal, why this picture was taken."

"You can inquire," said Judge Sanford, "whether the instructions were correctly followed, and whether the photograph is correct, and about the circumstances under which the picture was taken; but we do not think the witness can be asked to reveal the State's purpose in taking the picture."

The witness said that the State wanted him to give as good an idea as possible of what could be seen from that window.

"You didn't set your camera at any other plane. If you had, there would have been a somewhat different result?"

"Yes, but the difference would have been very trifling."

A picture of the Stannard house was shown, and Mr. Waller showed the jury the position of the door and the view from it down the road.

Edgar Hadley, of Hartford, one of the Mrs. Studley who was a witness, and who has died since this trial began, was called to the stand. He testified that his mother, Mrs. Jane E. Studley, testified in the Madison trial, and thus she died Nov. 3, 1879; he had known Mary Stannard, who had been employed by him and his mother. The questions, "When did she come?" "When did she leave?" "Where did she go?" were objected to and withdrawn. Neither side wished to hear anything more from the witness at this time, and he was allowed to go.

Luserne Stevens, whose house was opposite to Hayden's, testified that on the day of the murder, he was putting on wall-paper in a front room in his house, from which windows he could see a large part of Hayden's premises. On that day there were in his family himself, his wife, his child, his father, mother, and sister.

"Did you see anything of Hayden that day?"

"I first saw him at 11:15 A.M. or 11:30 A. M., as he was driving into his yard in a top-carriage. He came from the north. I next saw him north of his house, about 4 P. M. He was walking toward his house in his potato-field, and was between a large white stone and his house. He had on a straw hat, a striped shirt, and dark cotton pantaloons. About 6-7 P. M. Burton Mills, a boy, came along in the road, and said he had cut a dead body. Stannard's body had been found up by the Big Rock, and that she had either cut her own throat or some one had cut it for her. Hayden and I went up to the spot, and I helped to move the body. I saw blood on the ground near her right elbow after we picked her up, and I noticed pieces of blackberries near the body. Some of the pieces were in her mouth."

On cross-examination the witness said he had then been quite well acquainted with Hayden for one and a half years; he got up that morning about 6 o'clock, and after breakfast, about 7:30, began work with his wife; he couldn't tell where the rest of the family went that day, but felt sure that some of them were away from the house at times, the only person he saw go by the house was a Mrs. Ward and her son, in the afternoon. "I think that in the Madison trial," said he, "I said that I saw no one pass, but Mrs. Ward was afterwad recalled to my mind by my wife. I remember her, because it was thundering when she passed, and my wife said, 'I think she'll have to stop somewhere or get wet.' I said she couldn't hear the thunder because she was deaf. She replied that her boy could hear it. One quarter of an hour after I saw Hayden in the afternoon I asked my wife what time it was, and she said it was 4:15. There was nothing unusual about Hayden's appearance when I saw him coming toward his house. I didn't see any child out there, but there might have been one. I don't remember testifying to the Grand Jury that I saw him go into his front door." The witness then described the scene around the body. He didn't remember any one saying anything about a Coroner. Hayden assisted, apparently willingly. The witness was one who lighted a match and looked for a knife; he had never testified about the pieces of blackberries before; he saw five or six of the pieces, and each one was about one-quarter of a berry.

Over the testimony of the next witness there was a contest which lasted the remainder of the day. The State called Frank D. Root, of New-York, who reported the Madison trial for a New-Haven daily with which he was then connected, for the purpose of getting in, through him, the testimony of Mrs. Jane E. Studley, who has died since this trial began. The girl was at work for Mrs. Studley until the Sunday before her death, and in the Madison trial Mrs. Studley testified that she examined her, as a result of conversations concerning her condition, and found some evidence of pregnancy. Mary, she said, thought she was pregnant. The girl had made a confidant of her employer, and Mrs. Studley would have told the Madison court much more had it not been excluded. The witness testified that he heard Mrs. Studley's testimony, and made a report of it.

"Can you repeat it in the exact words she used?"

"Probably not."

"Can you give to this court its substance?"

"I can."

Objection was taken and the fight began. It was stated by Mr. Waller that only so much of Mary's declarations was desired as described her physical ailments at that time.

"Our chief objection," said Mr. Jones, "aside from the one which will be argued further on, about the admission of Mary's other declarations, is that the witness on the stand cannot testify unless he can give the exact language of the dead witness." He referred to the case of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts against Richards, in the 18th of Pickering, and the case of Warren against Nichols, in the 6th of Metcalf. The substance of the head-note in the first was that it was not sufficient in such a case for the witness to prove the substance and effect of the dead witness's testimony, but the whole and the precise words must be given. Judge Putnam said in the opinion that such evidence was competent, if the witness gave the same evidence as the dead witness. "The same, and not the substance," said Mr. Jones. The second case was similar. He also claimed that the hearing in Madison was not a trial.

Mr. Waller claimed that the substance of the dead witness's testimony was sufficient, and in support of his position brought out a long list of authorities, including First of Greenleaf, pp. 209 and 210; Waterman's United States Criminal Digest, edition of 1877, p. 135; 17th Vermont, State against Hooker; 17th, Alabama, Davis against State; 10th, Humphrey's, Tennessee, Kendrick against State; 45th, California, People against Murphy; 22d of New-Hampshire, Young against Dearborn and 5th, McLean's United States Circuit Court Reports for Illinois, p. 286. In a long address to the court he explained the bearing of these decisions and opinions upon the question at issue.

Mr. Watrous said that so far as he knew the course proposed had never been taken in a criminal cause in this State. The State Constitution says the accused person must be confronted by his witnesses. "Shall this witness," he asked, "be allowed to interpret through his brain the testimony of Mrs. Studley—to give his impression of what she meant? If he could repeat her exact language he would be within the rule."

Mr. Waller here was allowed to add some authorities. "The exact words," he said, "are doubtless better than the substance, but the substance is to be admitted, not because it is the best, but because it is the best that can be produced, the best being lost. To insist upon the exact words in every case would encourage rash and dishonest witnesses, and tend to exclude honest witnesses who wish strictly to observe the rule.

"But it is not here," said Mr. Watrous, "it is only his interpretation of her testimony which you offer. He may have misunderstood her. While a few authorities say the substance may be admitted, the best-reasoned cases I can find, particularly in New-York and Massachusetts, are unmistakably the other way. The witness is not a funnel through which Mrs. Studley's testimony can be poured into this panel. He was in Madison as a reporter, and, it may be, that, in looking for those things which are somewhat sensational, he overlooked something important but prosaic. Without any disrespect to him or his craft, I must say that I prefer, in such cases, the testimony of the counsel who took notes. The case cited in California is one in which counsel was allowed to testify from his notes."

After a short recess a decision was delivered by Judge Sanford. "The first objection," said he, "is the general one against hearsay, to the effect that Mrs. Studley herself, if alive, could not testify in this matter here, on the ground that Mary's statements to her were not part of the res gestæ. We understand that this will be argued hereafter. The second is that the Madison hearing was not a trial. It seems to us that for all purposes, so far as the decision of this question is concerned, it was a trial, although the magistrate did not have final jurisdiction. The third objection is that this witness's testimony is not admissible unless given in Mrs. Studley's exact words. We don't understand that he is to be asked to give his interpretation or impression of what she said, or its effect on his mind. If never heard, in cases where confessions have been used, that the exact words were insisted upon in order to make a confession competent; nor in cases where the declarations of a witness are given, for the purpose of impeaching him. We think the testimony ought not to be excluded."

Thereupon Mr. Waller asked the witness: "Did Mrs. Studley testify that she had made an examination of Mary Stannard's person? and if so, state what she said was the result of the examination."

"What difference does it make?" asked Watrous, "what her condition was there and then, or of what significance in this case is Mrs. Studley's diagnosis?"

"The question of motive has now arisen," said Mr. Harrison, "in the course of the prosecution. If the doctors had found that in four or five months Mary would have become a mother, and if we could show that four or five months before her death she was with Mr. Hayden under suspicious circumstances, could show that he was a married man and a lay preacher in a denomination of Christians which does not permit its teachers of morals to be publicly reputed to be fathers of bastards; could show that most of his income came from preaching, and that he hoped to be admitted to the Conference—then it might follow that the temptation would be very strong for him to wish the evidence of his immorality out of the way. The seducer sometimes avails himself of abortion, and sometimes chooses to kill both mother and child. Now, if it can be shown that Mary believed she was to become a mother, and that Mr. Hayden and she both acted in accordance with such a belief, a motive can be shown just as well as by establishing the fact that she was pregnant. The State proposes to show, beginning with this evidence, that Mr. Hayden's motive was a desire to remove the evidence of his sin." Several cases were cited as authorities.

"It is necessary to establish a motive," said Mr. Waller, "and we are trying to do it by showing that there was that about this girl which would have induced this man to murder her. In cases of robbery we can show that the robbed house contained valuables to attract the robber before we prove the robbery, and we can even show that the house was reputed to contain valuables, or that the robbed man was reputed to be rich. So can we proceed in this case. That which impelled the murderer was her supposed reputed pregnancy. If we show she was reputed to be pregnant, or thought she was, it is not necessary to prove that she was pregnant."

Mr. Watrous here began a long address in reply. The fact that she was pregnant, or that she was supposed to be, while at Mrs. Studley's, he contended, had nothing to do with his client or the charge that Mr. Hayden had killed the girl. The jury was excused, and the argument continued until 6 o'clock, when court was adjourned until to-morrow morning.

VEXATIOUS SEQUEL TO A HUNT.

THE TROUBLE WHICH A BUCK CAUSED A SHERIFF AND HIS FRIENDS.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Nov. 18.—A case that will attract unusual attention, owing to its peculiar nature, and the positions occupied by the parties to it, will come up at the December term of the Pike County (Penn.) Court. Under the Game law of Pike County, it is a criminal offense to hunt deer with dogs. About the middle of October, W. K. Ridgway, Sheriff of Pike County; John C. Westbrook, the County Clerk; Benjamin Bennett, High Constable of Milford Borough, and Louis Faucchere, proprietor of the Faucherre House, a noted Summer resort, went on a deer hunt back in Dingman Township, near Log-tavern Pond. They returned with a fine buck. The story they told was that the deer had been brought into the pond by the dogs, where, after an exciting chase about the pond, it was shot and killed by one of their number. On the strength of their declarations, Jacob Kleinhaus, a prominent citizen, swore out a warrant for the arrest of the whole party, on charge of violating the Game law by running deer with hounds. They were arrested, and, at a hearing before Esquire E. B. Quick, were held in $100 bail each to await the action of the Grand Jury. Mr. Kleinhaus offered to go bail for the prisoners, but they refused to give bail, and telegraphed to Honesdale for Judge C. P. Waller, before whom they wished to sue out a writ of habeas corpus. They were allowed to go about the town in charge of a constable until evening when, no word having been received from Judge Waller, they were locked up in jail. Next day they appeared before Justice H. L. West and gave the required bail.

After these proceedings it leaked out that the arrested men did not kill the deer at all, but had purchased it of a hunter named Hoffman. It was killed, they claimed, by a brother of the Justice who committed them to jail. They charge that the arrest was made at the instigation of the prosecutor, who held a grudge against two of the party, who had annoyed him with threats of prosecuting him for alleged violations of the Game law. The arrested men claim that they can show, beyond a doubt, that neither of them killed the deer, or had anything to do with it, their story about running it in the pond, and the subsequent killing, being told merely to give éclat to their possession of the buck. The proceedings already taken are attended with a big bill of costs, and if the innocence of the hunters is established before the Grand Jury the prosecutor will be mulcted for the amount. In that event, a suit to recover damages for false imprisonment is talked of, but it is not likely that will follow, as the "prisoners" will be content with a vindication and putting the costs on the complainant.

MISCELLANEOUS CITY NEWS

THE SEVENTH'S GREAT FAIR.

WHAT WAS SEEN AT THE BOOTHS YESTERDAY—PRIVATE SUBSCRIPTIONS.

When the doors of the new armory of the Seventh Regiment were thrown open at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon—the second day of the fair—the rain was falling heavily, and as the ladies took their places in their ornate bazaars, they felt uncomfortable, although the room was warm. There were fewer visitors than attendants on the main floor for fully an hour after the doors were opened, but as night fell, business men on their way homeward dropped in, and finding that a good dinner could be had in the restaurant, which is one of the attachments of the great show, they remained during the evening. Carriages laden with gayly-dressed ladies and children began to roll up to the doors on Fourth and Lexington avenues as early as 6 o'clock, the gas was lighted, and the immense caravansary became as gay as an Academy ball. The arrangement of the booths renders it necessary for any one desiring to find the head-quarters of any particular company, to make a circuit of the room, as, in order to satisfy all the companies, they were compelled to draw lots for a choice of positions. Thus on entering the room the visitor finds the bazaars of Companies K and G on either hand, while those of Companies H and D flank the rustic greenery, attended by the lady friends of the field and staff, in the centre of the room. The booths of Companies E and I are on the right and left centres respectively, those of Companies A and B come next, while the ornamental stalls of Companies C and F bring up the rear. The Chairmen of the Ladies' Committees as the several booths yesterday were as follows: Companies A, Mrs. Capt. Hayden; B, Mrs. R. F. Ware; C, Miss Secor; D, Mrs. H. B. Holly; E, Mrs. Frank Munn; F, Mrs. Frederick A. Goodwin; G, Mrs. C. G. Abrams; H, Mrs. Ellwood E. Thorne; I, Mrs. C. C. Arthur; K, Miss Bessie Tompkins. To prevent any possibility of jealousy among the ladies who manage the booths, the Chairmen of the Ladies' Committee are to be changed every day. The first company's bazaar would not be much out of place in Tokio, with its display of Japanese silks woven into various forms. The roof of its gaudy pavilion was amply decked with American flags, and a grand piano of local manufacture was among the articles exposed for sale. The company also has a a bazaar for the sale and raffle of children's toys. The booth of the second company is peculiarly war-like. The pillars, supporting a dome over the stall, are surmounted by stacks of rifles, and the silken banners worn at different times by its "tug-of-war" team occupy a conspicuous place. Silk hats and dressing-gowns for gentlemen, handsome silverware, and a large, well-appointed doll, are among the articles exposed for sale on its tables. The third company deals in heavy wares, among which is a set of Venetian furniture, a lady's jewel-safe, a saddle, whip, and riding harness. A dog-cart and harness, a superb copy of Doré's illustrated Bible, billiard-tables, and a pacer rowing-shell are among the fourth company's inducements. One of the prominent features of the fifth company's collection is a handsome baby-carriage, which is to be presented to the parents of a child under 1 year old who receives the greatest number of votes. Artists could obtain quite a respectable kit of utensils at this booth. The sixth company displays a large imitation brown-stone mansion, elegantly furnished, and filled with dolls of all ages and sexes. The seventh company exhibits about $25,000 worth of silverware, and its members are particularly interested in raffling first-water diamond jewelry at $1 a chance. A cloth and velvet prayer-rug from the Mosque of St. Sophia, at Constantinople, attracts much attention at the booth of Company H. Besides the handsome, well-trimmed yacht which the ninth company displays as an ornamental feature of the fair, it has a large number of useful articles with an ornamental exterior. What appears at a distance to be a stack of drums, proves to be a pile of waste-paper baskets, which are close imitations of drums. Company K shows an elegant assortment of jewelry.

One of the most interesting features of the fair was the vote for handsomely-mounted dress swords, of which there were several. One of them was on the table of Company E. It was a handsome blade of steel, inlaid with gold, the gift of Mr. Frederick Coughton, of the Real Estate Record, who is a member of the Veteran Corps of the Seventh Regiment. The vote for the sword to be awarded to the officer of the Army or Navy at 10 P. M. stood: Gen. Grant, 51; Gen. Sherman, 42; Admiral Porter, 39; Gen. McDowell, 32, and a number of scattering ballots. For the National Guardsman's sword, Col. R. O. Ryder, of the Ninth Regiment, headed the list with 74; Major E. A. McAlpine of the Seventy-first Regiment, received 56; Capt. Frank Bacon, Second Regiment, California National Guard, 41, and Gen. Alexander Shaler, 20. In the vote for the silver and gold mounted gun, Col. S. O. Ryder also led the list, having 89 votes, while Col. Josiah Porter, of the Twenty-second, had 60, and Capt. Burke, of the 1st Gatling Guard, of Georgia, received 45. The Sixty-ninth Regiment Board of Officers sent a handsome sword, with two scabbards, epaulets, belts, and shoulder-straps, to be awarded to the Second Lieutenant (not a member of the Sixty-ninth) who should receive the greatest number of votes. This will be put up for voting to-day. The new rifle range in the basement, managed by Capt. Robbins and Sergt. George F. Merchant, was well patronized during the day. The guns used are of small calibre, and the distance covered in shooting is 125 feet. The new range, when completed, will be 100 yards in length, outside of the firing-point. It will be impossible to obtain an accurate statement of the amount of money taken in at the several stands, for the reason that a silver cup has been offered to the company which takes in the most money during the fair. The result of this is that the companies are keeping their sales quiet, and openly avow their intention of taking the cup if they have to make up money from their individual pockets on the final day of the fair. The open subscriptions received yesterday were $1,000 from Jim Keene, $500 each from Judge Hilton and Mrs. Stewart, and $100 from Ira Shafer.

HUNTING IN THE FAR WEST.

THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN TELLING HIS EXPERIENCES.

The American Geographical Society held an interesting meeting last evening in Chickering Hall, partly for the transaction of routine business, but chiefly to listen to some of the hunting experiences of the Earl of Dunraven, who is on his way to the Rocky Mountains. When the meeting was called to order by the President of the society, Judge Charles P. Daly, an audience had gathered which more than filled the body of the hall. Among those on the platform and in the audience were Prof. Bodenstedt, the German poet; the Hon. Edwards Pierrepont, the Rev. Dr. R. D. Hitchcock, Francis A. Stout, Col. F. Bailey Myers, Gen. James Grant Wilson, Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, G

TUESDAY, Nov. 18—P. M.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange was less active, the volume of business contrasted with that of yesterday, showing a decrease of over 165,000 shares. The early dealings were characterized by some of firmness, owing to the continued bear raids upon the market, and the leading stocks declined ½ to 3⅞ cent., with the coal shares, Erie and St. Louis and San Francisco most conspicuous in the downward movement. During the afternoon the temper of speculation became buoyant, and appearances indicated that parties who were free sellers in the morning were desirous of covering their short lines. SKILLED FORGERS AT WORK

A SYSTEMATIC RAID ON THE DOWN-TOWN BANKS.

BOLD OPERATIONS OF THE GANG—BLANK CHECKS, SIGNATURES, AND PRIVATE STAMPS PERFECTLY IMITATED—YESTERDAY'S ATTEMPT ON THE FOURTH NATIONAL.

It is becoming evident that the rush of business in the down-town banks, consequent upon the present inordinate speculation, is being taken advantage of by an organized gang of forgers to further a systematic scheme of swindling. In the majority of cases the bank officers, if imposed upon, prefer to submit to a small loss rather than to allow the details to be made public. Hence, there is reason to believe that the operations of the gang have been more wide-spread and successful than appears on the surface. The rashness of a forger in trying his game a second time on the National Bank of the State of New-York led to his arrest and to the exposure of that transaction on Monday. Yesterday, about noon, a well-dressed man, apparently 28 or 30 years of age, entered the counting-room of the Fourth National Bank, corner of Cedar and Nassau streets, and presented to Paying Teller Duncan McGregor a check, purporting to be drawn by Fisk & Hatch in favor of William Cook, for $1,032. The check was an almost perfect imitation of those used by the firm. On subsequent close comparison a difference was detected in the figures 8 and 9 of the date 1879, the heavy stroke of the 8 being on the wrong side, and the tail of the 9 being straight in the forgery while it is curved in the genuine. Otherwise the plate from which the spurious blank was printed was a perfect imitation. The person who filled in the body of the forged check was not so good a penman as the clerk who does that work for the firm. This and the fact that the blue ink used was of a paler color than usual struck the Teller's eye. Otherwise there was nothing on the face of the check to arouse suspicion at a hasty glance. The peculiar signature of Fisk & Hatch was faultlessly imitated, and so was their private stamp punched across the figures in the lower left-hand corner. Mr. McGregor turned the check around. First, there was the indorsement, "William Cook," in a bold hand. Underneath it was another faultless imitation of Fisk & Hatch's signature, and below this a perfect fac-simile of the official stamped indorsement of the First National Bank, with the name "Summerfield" in the centre is. The forger had overdone the matter, there being no person of that name at the First National with authority to indorse for the bank. Mr. McGregor whistled the private signal which calls the bank's detective to his assistance, but the latter happened to have gone to the Sub-Treasury with a messenger who had some gold certificates in charge, a fact which the forger doubtless knew and had taken advantage of. The whistle seemed to alarm the man, and he asked what the matter was. Mr. McGregor endeavored to reassure, and at the same time detain, him by asking questions as to the indorsements on the back of the check. He had, meanwhile, noticed at the end of the line of waiting clerks a colored porter in the employ of Fisk & Hatch, and had managed to secretly put the check into his hands, with instructions to show it to his employers. He hoped that the porter would bring Fisk & Hatch's detective back with him, but he was not able, for fear of arousing suspicion, to state the position of affairs to him fully, and Fisk & Hatch, knowing that the bank employed its own detective, doubtless did not consider it necessary to send theirs. When the porter returned with the news that the check was a forgery, the stranger turned around and walked leisurely out. This further confirmed the Teller in the belief that he was an accomplished hand at the business, for had he shown undue haste and thus encountered the detective returning, his chances of escape would have been few. As it was, he disappeared completely before the astonished crowd through which he passed could realize from the shouts of the Teller what the matter was. The officers of the bank have placed the matter in the hands of Pinkerton's Detective Agency. They propose to leave no stone unturned to effect the arrest and conviction of the forger and his accomplices. Mr. McGregor is positive that he will be able to identify the man should he ever see him again.

The manner in which the Bank of the State of New-York forgery was perpetrated was somewhat different, but equally skillful and bold. Early on Saturday morning last, the prisoner Waters, alias Livingston, who is a dapper, well-dressed fellow, entered the bank and asked for a new check-book. Supposing him to have been sent by some customer, one was given him on payment of the usual price, $7 50. Late the same afternoon, when the rush incident to the closing up of a heavy week's business was at its height, the same man appeared in line, and, when his turn came, presented a check for $900, purporting to be drawn by Barclay & Livingston, Beaver-street importers, to the order of Samuel Ogden. The firm's signature, and even their private mark, appeared to be all right, so perfectly were they imitated, and the money was paid. Subsequently, when he had time to think the matter over, the fact that he had departed from his custom of requiring identification from a stranger troubled Teller Duer, and he sent the check to the firm's office for examination. It was at once pronounced a forgery. The color of the ink with which the check was printed was green, and the name of the bank was in script. It had been a long time since the firm had used blanks of that sort. The book which they are now using is printed in purple, and the name of the bank is in old English text. The book which they used previously was similar, except that the color of the ink was red. Mr. Robert Mackey, who draws all the firm's checks, accounted for the perfection of the signature by acknowledging that he had been in the habit of filling them in and signing them with rosyine ink, a practice which he said he should discard forthwith. The bank people concluded to pocket their loss, being without hope of catching the forger. On Monday, however, shortly after 1 P. M., emboldened to rashness by his previous success, he again made his appearance in the bank and presented a second check, similar in all respects to the first, except that the amount was just double. Teller Duer kept a straight face, and excusing himself for a moment, communicated with Cashier Edwards, who told him to pay a portion of the amount. He accordingly handed the forger $500, and the latter stepped leisurely toward the door, counting the money as he went. At that moment Cashier Edwards stepped out of his private office, and touching him lightly on the shoulder, requested his presence inside. The man stepped into the Cashier's office without hesitation, and, seating himself, calmly awaited what was coming. "I want that $500," said Mr. Edwards. The forger was not in the least discomfited by this abrupt demand. Recognizing instantly, however, that the game was up, he laughed, and answered: "I haven't got it. I passed it," meaning that he had given it to a confederate. "That's a lie!" retorted Mr. Edwards. "I was watching you closely, and I know you did not." The forger persisted that his statement was true, and Mr. Edwards, seeing that nothing could be got out of him, thrust him into the vault cage at the rear of the Cashier's private office, used for the storage of securities during business hours, and locked the door. He then dispatched a messenger for the Police. Detectives Dunn and Radford quickly responded. The prisoner received them smilingly, and reiterated his assertion that he had "passed" the $500. "Search me, gentlemen!" he said. He was searched, and the money was found concealed underneath his shirt. He was subsequently recognized as having been arrested a short time ago on a charge of stealing gold pens, and as having previously served a term for the larceny of diamonds. Yesterday, when arraigned in the Tombs Police Court, he impudently pleaded not guilty, and refused to answer any questions about the checks. He was held to answer in default of $3,000 bail.

In both the above cases the numbers of the forged checks were surprisingly close to those of the genuine checks last previously drawn by the two firms. The Police and parties interested are at a loss to explain how the forgers obtained their knowledge on this point, but it is surmised that they managed to obtain genuine checks for small amounts in each case, and this may furnish a clue that may lead to the detection of the person who endeavored to victimize the Fourth National Bank yesterday.

RELIEF FOR THE CRIPPLED.

Among the many worthy institutions of public charity which abound in this City, few, if any, are more entitled to the patronage and support of those willing to contribute from their means for the benefit of the unfortunate members of society than the New-York Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled, whose hospital is situated corner of Forty-second-street and Lexington-avenue. The benefits of the institution are annually given to thousands of poor persons who, but for it, would be compelled to live and die without any relief, for the reason that they have not the means to pay the expenses of private surgical treatment. During the past year more than 7,000 patients have been treated by the society for all kinds of ailments, the largest percentage of whom were suffering from ruptures. The managers say they are now greatly in need of funds, and they appeal to the charitably inclined for money to carry on their work. The officers are: Stewart Brown, President; Alexander Hall, Acting Secretary, and Dr. James Knight, Surgeon-in-Chief.

THE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE.

There were few new developments in the longshoremen's strike yesterday. Owing to the rainy weather, little work was done except on the covered piers. It is thought by many that although the stevedores along the East River, with one or two exceptions, are paying 40 cents an hour at present, they will go back to the old prices as soon as the accumulated freights now on their hands have been shipped. The rush, however, will probably last for some time. Along the North River it was also quiet yesterday. The men employed on several of the wharves of the Boston and other East River lines, are dissatisfied with their pay and threaten to strike. The City of Merida was removed yesterday from Pier No. 3 to the Spotskyn side, where she will probably take her cargo. At the lower Anchor pier some of the men are holding out, but the stevedores have no difficulty in manning hands enough to work the two steamships moored there. The strike at Morgan's pier still continues, but the steamship loading there will probably not be delayed. At the upper Anchor line many of the men refused to go to work yesterday morning, but the work of unloading the Utopia was continued by those who were unwilling to take part in the strike. It is not probable that there will be a general strike among the longshoremen employed by the European companies, as the men have been given to understand that no further increase of pay will be granted. The Unicorn Line stevedores have come to terms with their men.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

A NUMBER OF HIS FRIENDS ENTERTAIN HIM AT A PUBLIC BREAKFAST.

A number of the friends of Mr. George Jacob Holyoake gave a public breakfast in his honor, at the St. James Hotel, at noon yesterday. Mr. Holyoake sails for England immediately, and this little entertainment was prepared to enable him to meet many of his friends and admirers before his departure. About 50 persons were present on the occasion. Dr. Bellows presided, and Mr. Holyoake sat beside him. Among those present were Mr. Peter Cooper, Parke Godwin, Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, of Washington; Dr. Washburn, Dr. Chapin, the Rev. R. Heber Newton, Mr. F. L. Olmstead, Felix Adler, Mr. Croly, Mr. O. B. Potter, Mr. Rowland Hazard, of Rhode Island; Mr. John H. Strahan, Mr. Wayland Smith, and others. The guests seemed to have come to the table with well-sharpened appetites, and much time was occupied in disposing of the eatables on the table. Thespeaking came in with the cheese, and Dr. Bellows rose to introduce the distinguished guest. His speech was marked by all that happiness of thought and grace of expression characteristic of the venerable gentleman, and in terms of warm eulogy he spoke of the life-long efforts of Mr. Holyoake in the cause of the poor and the lowly, and his steady devotion to the work of helping men to help themselves. Then Mr. Holyoake, being introduced, made an excellent speech, mainly devoted to co-operation, but thanking those present for their cordial good wishes. His visit to America, he said, was made for recreation, and he could say with truth that it was the first vacation he had had in his life. He should remember it always as one of the most pleasant periods of it. Mr. Parke Godwin, being next called upon, told of his early days, when he was one of a band of young men, among whom were Horace Greeley, George William Curtis, Hawthorne, and other since distinguished men, who met together to regenerate the world after the system of Fourier. Mr. Felix Adler made an earnest speech on the necessity for co-operation among the working men of this country, because we were going on under our present system in a way which in the end must give us as large and wretched a class of poor as any to be found in European countries. He also spoke highly of the philanthropic efforts of Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson. Dr. Washburn praised Mr. Holyoake for what he had done in a short and eloquent speech. Mr. Rowland Hazard told of the difficulties which he had found to lie in the way of co-operation in this country, or at least those which he found to exist in the industrial condition of Rhode Island; Mr. Whitelaw Reid said a few pleasant things appropriate to the occasion, and the venerable Peter Cooper, not being able to read his speech very well, Mr. Reid read it for him. Letters were read by the Rev. R. Heber Newton from President Hayes, Josiah Quincy, Wendell Phillips, Edward Everett Hale, George William Curtis, Col. Ingersoll, Dr. Bevan, Abram S. Hewitt, Charles L. Brace, and others, and the proceedings closed with a short and well-turned speech of farewell to the guest by Dr. Bellows.

UNPROTECTED TRADE-MARKS.

BUSINESS MEN DISSATISFIED WITH THE DECISION—THE OTHER SIDE.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court, in Washington, in regard to trade-marks, has created wide-spread consternation among the proprietors of these business signals. The general impression, as expressed in a series of interviews with business men, was that they were robbed of all redress by the decision, notwithstanding they had paid the Government for the privilege of being protected from any infringement upon their proprietary rights. The impression is regarded as erroneous by Gen. Benjamin F. Foster, who was instrumental in securing the decision itself. The law which has just been declared invalid by the Supreme Court, was passed by Congress Aug. 14, 1876, and provided that criminal proceedings could be taken against those persons who were guilty of making or dealing in imitations of private labels or trade-marks. The penalty prescribed was a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment for a period not exceeding two years, or both fine and imprisonment. Under this law, Adolph Wittemann, of the firm of Wittemann Brothers, lithographers, of No. 184 William-street, was arrested and indicted on three distinct charges. Emil Steffins, another lithographer, of William-street, who has since retired from business, was also indicted at the same time and on the same charge. The indictments against Wittemann were filed in the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of this State, in May, 1878. The complainants against him were the well-known liquor houses of Hennessy & Co., Otard, Dupuy & Co., and H. Piper & Co. His counsel, Gen. Foster, demurred against the indictment, on the ground that the whole trade-mark legislation of Congress was without constitutional warrant. Judges Benedict and Blatchford, before whom the argument was made, differ in their opinions on the points which the General presented, and the case was sent to the United States Supreme Court for adjudication. Two clauses of the Federal Constitution were brought up in support of the theory that the law of 1876 was constitutional. One related to authors and inventors, and provided that Congress has power "to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, by securing, for limited terms, to authors and inventors the exclusive rights of their respective writings and discoveries." The other involved the regulation of commerce, the clause in question empowering Congress "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes." In neither of these clauses did the court find a warrant for the enactment of the law of 1876, and hence its decision that the law is unconstitutional.

"The decision," said Gen. Foster, when questioned in regard to it yesterday, "will affect an enormous interest all over the country, as the registration of trade-marks and labels in the Government office in Washington has been immense. I think there are a large number of indictments now pending in different parts of the country awaiting this very decision. It will, of course, become necessary now to abandon them. The practical result of the decision is to abolish criminal proceedings against those who infringe upon the trade-marks of their neighbors in business. It does not, however, prevent injured parties from suing for damages, either in the United States courts or in the courts of this State. These courts are now, as they always have been, open to civil suits for damages. Hitherto it has been believed by those who registered their trade-marks that any infringement was met with a heavy punishment—a fair enough belief considering the plainness of the language employed in drafting the law. The perplexing thing about this decision to the Government is that a series of treaties have been made with foreign countries protecting those residents who registered their trade-mark in Washington, and now the Government is unable to protect them. The value of registration is also much impaired, for about the only privilege which it affords proprietors is to pay the Government $30 for a certificate of registration. Criminal proceedings, however, may still be taken under the law of this State, which fixes the penalty for infringement at imprisonment for six or twelve months or the payment of a fine of $5,000. The State law, however, has been very loosely drawn, and it is very defective. Its administration has been almost barren of results, and its value is trifling. I have no doubt, however, that an action for damages, if it be well founded, will yield results to those business men who undertake it."

THE COUNTY CANVASS.

AN OBJECTION TO MR. LANGBEIN'S ELECTION AS CIVIL JUSTICE.

The Board of County Canvassers were served yesterday morning with an order issued by Judge Donohue to show cause why they should not be enjoined from receiving or counting the votes cast for Mr. J. C. Julius Langbein as the Republican candidate for Civil Justice in the Seventh Judicial District. The order, which is returnable at 11 A. M. to-day, was granted on the application of Leo C. Desar, the Tammany candidate for the same office, on the following grounds: That at the time of the election, and for a long time prior thereto, Mr. Langbein was a member of the Legislature of the State, that under section 7 of article 3 of the Constitution of the State of New-York, all votes cast for Mr. Langbein are void, owing to the fact that his term of office in the Legislature will not expire until Jan. 1, 1880; that under the provision named, Mr. Langbein was ineligible, and all votes cast for him, therefore, void and of no effect.

The official returns from the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth Assembly Districts were counted yesterday and last evening by the Board of County Canvassers. The only serious irregularity discovered was in the return from the Ninth Election District of the Twentieth Assembly District, which gave no record of the votes for Alderman at Large. A note by the Inspectors set forth that the omission was due to the fact that the Poll Clerks carried away the books before the completion of the official returns.

NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The committee to organize a National Agricultural Society that shall represent every section of the country and combine every interest directly or indirectly related to agriculture, have issued an address to the public from their head-quarters, No. 323 Pearl-street. They state that the aim of the society is the advancement of agriculture in the United States by practical methods, such as periodical exhibitions of soil products in the principal cities of the country; the encouragement of immigration, the discussion of questions of agriculture and of commerce in its products, and the collection and dissemination of thought and experience thereon. While holding that agriculture is the basis of all wealth, they recognize the fact that manufacturing, commercial, trade, and transportation interests are identical with those of agriculture. They ask for the support and encouragement of the public at large. A convention, to which all persons interested in the subject are invited, will be held at the Metropolitan Hotel, in this City, on the 10th of December, to further the design of the Committee on Organization. The address is largely signed by representative men in public life and in the domain of agriculture throughout the country, among whom are ex-Gov. Hendricks, of Indiana; Seymour, of New-York; Parker, of New-Jersey, and Hyde, of Connecticut; Cassius M. Clay, of Kentucky; Gov. Head, of New-Hampshire; United States Senator Davis, of West Virginia; Dr. A. S. Heath, President Farmers' Club, New-York; C. V. Riley, Chief United States Entomological Commissioner; Gov. Blackburn, of Kentucky; Victor E. Piolette, Master State Grange, Pennsylvania.

LOCAL POLITICAL EVENTS.

THE REPUBLICAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE—HOW ALDERMAN PERLEY CUT CORNELL.

The Republican Central Committee held its regular meeting last night in Republican Hall, in Thirty-third-street. Gen. Chester A. Arthur presided. Secretary Solon B. Smith called the roll and reported 122 members of the committee present. When the name of Alonzo B. Cornell was called it was greeted with a gentle rumbling of boots on the floor. On calls for reports of committees, Col. Joel W. Mason, Chairman of the Executive Committee, reported the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the delegates to the Central Committee of 1880 be apportioned on the basis of the vote cast for Governor at the late election, one delegate being allowed for each 200 Republican votes or fraction thereof exceeding one-half of said number. That immediately upon the declaration of the official canvass the officers of the Central Committee shall issue the call for elections for officers of associations and delegates to the Central Committee, in accordance with the above.

A communication from Charles N. Talntor and 15 other members of the Third District Association was read by its Secretary. It protested that at the meeting of the association, held on Nov. 6, the association refused to vote on the names of persons proposed for membership at two meetings held previously, notwithstanding the earnest request of the members that they should be voted on. The protest asked the Central Committee to take such action as would secure the rights of all members of the association. The communication was referred.

It is now expected that some more charges will be made against the action of Bernard Biglin and Michael Cregan in the Fourth District (formerly Seventh) Aldermanic contest at the late election, and that Mr. William Law, the candidate of the Republicans, who was defeated by the exertions of Biglin and Cregan, in spite of the District association, would call the attention of the Central Committee to the outrage to which he was subjected. Mr. George Bliss, who was expected to take the first step against Cregan and Biglin, was not present, and it was learned that he had concluded not to submit the proofs that he had secured to the new committee is elected. The only result that would have come of submitting a protest last night would have been its reference to a committee, and as that committee would cease to be as soon as the new one came in, the grievance would necessarily have to be presented anew.

William Lenihan is a district messenger of the Board of Alderman, and an appointee of Alderman Perley. At the late election, Lenihan had charge of the Republican booth at the Twenty-fifth Election District of the Twentieth Assembly District. It was openly charged on election day that Lenihan, acting under instructions from his chief, Alderman Perley, sold out Mr. Cornell, the Republican candidate for Governor, in consideration of votes for Mr. Perley. It was also asserted very positively that a large number of Republicans of the district discovered, on opening tickets given to them by Lenihan, that the name of Lucius Robinson had been pasted over that of Cornell, and that in all the tickets issued from the box during the day a similar alteration had been made. The official returns counted by the Board of County Canvassers last evening go far to prove the truth of the charges. The Twenty-fifth Election District of the Twentieth Assembly District gave Alderman Perley 126 votes, while his associate, John McClave, received only 49. Again, Mr. Cornell received only 63 votes, against 122 for Gov. Robinson. The result, as shown by the foregoing figures, proves that Lenihan's energetic efforts on election day in behalf of his patron, Mr. Perley, were remarkably successful.

THE SCHOOL-BOY HOMICIDE.

FUNERAL OF THE LITTLE VICTIM—THE ALLEGED MURDERER ARRESTED.

The funeral of George Estey, the school-boy who was killed by an Italian musician, in Jersey City Heights, took place at the home of his parents, in Vreeland-street, yesterday afternoon. Public School No. 14, which little George attended, had been closed at noon, and the teachers of the school attended the funeral in a body. His class-mates marched to the house in line, bearing some beautifully-devised floral offerings. The teachers of the Bergen Baptist Sunday-school, of which George was a member, were also present, and sent the figure in immortelles of a lamb resting on a pedestal of flowers, in which were traced the words, "Safe in the arms of Jesus." A part of the choir of the church sang, with touching pathos, the hymn beginning with these words. The Rev. Dr. Evarts, the Pastor of the church, led the funeral services, and the Rev. George B. Vosburgh, Dr. Evarts's predecessor, delivered the funeral address. The remains were taken to New-York Bay Cemetery, and interred in the presence of a vast multitude of people.

The Police efforts to capture the murderer were yesterday crowned with success. The two Italians, by one of whom the injury was inflicted, fled as soon as they had thrown the stone, and one of them was for some time in the custody of the New-York City Chief Murphy, of Jersey City, succeeded after much effort in learning that the name of the one whose violence caused death was Francisco Barrile. His companion was shadowed for some days, and the Chief ultimately learned Barrile had fled to Philadelphia. Detective Birdsall was sent at once to that city and located the man. A son of Policeman Irving, who had seen the musicians, and knew them by sight, was at Birdsall's request sent to Philadelphia Monday evening to identify the man under surveillance. The lad declared that he was the one who threw the stone, and Birdsall, with the aid of Detective O'Neill and two Philadelphia Police, arrested Barrile. The Pennsylvania laws do not permit the removal of a prisoner from the State, except upon requisition, though he is willing to go, and Barrile was locked up to await the action of the New-Jersey authorities. During the day a society of which Barrile is a member supplied him with a lawyer, and an application for a writ of habeas corpus was made to one of the State Judges. The argument will be heard to-day. Meanwhile, Chief Murphy dispatched Capt. Mullaney to Trenton and Harrisburg for the necessary papers, and Barrile is expected to arrive in Jersey City to-morrow evening.

Detective O'Neill, who arrived from Philadelphia last night, says that Barrile declares that he knows nothing of the homicide. He was captured at No. 728 Carpenter-street, Philadelphia.

TENEMENT-HOUSE REFORM.

A BUILDER COMPELLED TO COMPLY WITH THE HEALTH LAWS.

Four tenement-houses are being built by Anthony McQuade in East Seventy-fifth-street, west of Third-avenue. It is held by the Board of Health that the houses are being constructed in defiance of health laws, and not in accordance with plans presented to, and approved by, that board. A temporary injunction restraining McQuade from continuing work on the buildings was obtained by the board last week in the Superior Court. Among the affidavits on which the injunction was based, was one made by Mr. James Gallatin, a gentleman who is interested in the project of making tenement-houses pleasanter and more healthful places of residence than they ever have been in this City. Mr. Gallatin swore that he is a member of a committee of nine appointed at a public meeting held Feb. 28, 1879, to investigate the evils connected with the construction of tenement-houses. Having had his attention drawn to the houses in Seventy-fifth-street, he examined them carefully, and found that two rooms on each floor of each house were dark, and could receive no air directly from the street or from the rear yard. He discovered that in the plans of the buildings filed with the Board of Health, the inner rooms were represented as lighted and ventilated by shafts of the dimensions—9 feet by 2—required by the Health laws. It was the opinion of Mr. Gallatin that, without such shafts, the inner rooms of the houses would be unfit for habitation. A motion to make the injunction permanent was to have been made yesterday before Judge Sedgwick, in Superior Court Chambers, but it was staid by the appearance in court of Mr. McQuade with a stipulation by which he agreed to comply with the Health laws by constructing air and light shafts if he were allowed to go on with the work of building. Mr. W. F. Prentice, counsel for the Health Board, accepted the stipulation, and consented to a modification of the injunction in accordance with its terms.

The papers were referred to the Corporation Counsel.

Owing to the absence of Mr. Haskin, the investigation was postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. L. H. Hellwitz, President of a chess club in the Bowery, called on Superintendent Walling yesterday and reported the loss of a pocket-book containing $1,364 in cash and two checks for small amounts. Mr. Hellwitz went to the Pacific Bank and drew the money on two checks. He put it in his pocket-book, which he supposed he put in the breast pocket of his inner coat. Soon after leaving the bank he missed the pocket-book and money.

Charles Comlossey, a Fort Hamilton United States marine, yesterday went into Patrick H. Martin's liquor saloon, at No. 162 Chatham-street. He ordered a glass of beer and tendered a five-dollar note in payment. Martin confiscated it, saying it was counterfeit, and refused to return it. Comlossey had him arrested, and he was taken before Justice Morgan. The latter said: "This is an old trick, but a good one. Martin, if you don't return this man his bill I'll lock you up for robbery." No one ever produced a greenback quicker than Martin did a moment later.

Mr. Mason was at one time an entry clerk in the Custom-house at $2,000 a year. All three passed competitive examinations. They stood first, second, and third in order of merit on the list of applicants.

Betts, proprietors of the Eastern Hotel, in Whitehall-street, New-York, to recover $16,800 which the plaintiff claims was left in and stolen from a coat which he surrendered to the defendants as security for a 25-cent breakfast, the jury disagreed. It was understood that the jury stood 11 for the defendants and 1 for the plaintiff.

Platt will be held by the authorities until a requisition is granted by the Governor of New-Jersey.

NEW-JERSEY.

A match game of foot-ball, between clubs representing Yale and Columbia Colleges, is announced to take place on the grounds of the St. George's Cricket Club, in Hoboken, next Saturday. Game is to be called at 3 o'clock P. M.

The Hon. T. J. McDonald, regular Democratic nominee for Assembly in the Second District, Jersey City, who was defeated by Patrick Sheeran, an Independent candidate, claims that Sheeran's election was compassed by fraud, and has instituted proceedings to secure the seat in the Assembly Chamber.

The bookstore of T. P. Bayes, at Orange, was entered by burglars on Monday night and robbed of books valued at $500. Entrance was effected in a novel manner. The building is a double one, and some repairs were being made to the adjoining house which rendered it necessary to lay bare part of the foundation wall, in which the thieves knocked a large hole, and so got into Bayes's cellar.

Emma E. Miles, of No. 181 South Orange-avenue, Newark, was fatally injured on Monday night by the explosion of a kerosene lamp. Miss Miles sat at a table reading, when the lamp, which was a swinging one above her head, exploded, scattering the burning oil over her and setting fire to her clothing. Her face was so badly burned as scarcely to be recognizable. Miss Miles was still alive last night, but there were no hopes for her recovery.

Last evening a colored driver, in the employ of the Merchants' Express Company of Newark, drove into Jersey City with a valuable load of merchandise, and stopped as a saloon on Montgomery-street to get a drink of beer. When he returned to the street, three minutes later, his team and wagon were gone. It is suspected that they were driven away by persons who designed to steal the valuables in the load. A general alarm was sent out by the Police to all the precincts, but up to a late hour last evening no tidings had been received of the missing teams.

COUNTING OUT A SUPERVISOR.

The Grand Jury of the Queens County Court of Sessions were still engaged yesterday in the investigation of alleged frauds in Long Island City at the recent election, by one of which Mr. Joseph McLaughlin contends he was cheated out of his election as Supervisor. It is understood that no difficulty was experienced in coming to the conclusion that the returns of the first polling district of the Fourth Ward had been changed so as to count Mr. McLaughlin out, but the difficulty was in determining exactly who is responsible for the erasure and substitution of figures. It is probable, however, that arrests will be made. Meanwhile, Mr. McLaughlin has entered a protest against Mr. Claven, his opponent, taking the seat, and will carry the case into the courts.

INSANE ASYLUM ABUSES.

RESOLUTIONS DECLARING THE POSITIONS OF DRS. STREW AND KINGSTON VACANT.

The Commissioners of Charities and Correction evince a disposition to act upon the recommendations of the Board of Consulting Physicians and Surgeons respecting the two institutions for the insane under their charge, with promptitude and vigor. The resignation of Resident Physician W. W. Strew, of the New-York City Lunatic Asylum, on Blackwell's Island, not having been offered, as it was believed it would be, in view of the adverse report and censure of the medical board, the subject was taken up at the regular meeting of the Commissioners yesterday morning, and the following resolutions were offered by Commissioner Jacob Hess:

Resolved, That the position of Medical Superintendent of the New-York City Lunatic Asylum on Blackwell's Island be declared vacant, and that Dr. William W. Strew be and is hereby notified that his services are no longer required.

Resolved, That Dr. E. F. Kingston, Assistant Medical Superintendent of the New-York City Lunatic Asylum, be and is hereby notified that his services are no longer required.

Resolved, That Dr. A. R. MacDonald is hereby directed to take temporary charge as Medical Superintendent of the New-York City Lunatic Asylum, in addition to his duties as Medical Superintendent of the New-York City Asylum for the Insane, until further orders from this board.

Commissioner Townsend Cox being absent from the City, Commissioner Brennan suggested that the matter was so important that a full vote of the board was desirable, and Commissioner Hess consented that the resolutions should lie over until to-day, when they will be taken up and acted upon. Commissioner Cox cannot, it is said, return home in time to join his colleagues at an earlier hour than 11 o'clock this morning and the meeting, which usually takes place at 9 o'clock, and is over by 10, will be postponed to meet the emergency. The surprise expressed in official circles that Dr. Strew has not sent in his resignation without waiting for the board to declare his position vacant by a formal resolution. As foreshadowed in THE TIMES, several days in advance of the official report of the medical board, Dr. MacDonald will for the present assume the direction of both institutions. Should his administration of the two institutions prove as able as that of the medical administration of the Ward's Island Hospital, Dr. MacDonald will remain in charge of both, and they will thus be practically consolidated under one direction; but for the present his appointment to the Blackwell's Island Hospital is to be regarded as an experiment.

THE LOSS OF THE ALABAMA.

A cable dispatch has been received stating that the steam-ship Alabama, which sailed from this port for Rouen on Oct. 29, has been wrecked at the mouth of the River Seine. Mr. J. C. Seager, the agent, says that she carried a cargo of 64,842 bushels of wheat, three-fourths of which was in bulk and the remainder in bags. The vessel and cargo were insured. She was commanded by Capt. Humphreys, who was saved, with his entire crew. The Alabama was an iron screw steam-ship of 1,166 tons, and sailed under the British flag. She was built by Palmer Brothers, at West Hartlepool, England, in 1860. She had five bulkheads and six water-tight compartments. Her dimensions were 267.2 feet in length, 37.5 feet breadth of beam, and 21 feet 1 inch depth of hold. Her owners had chartered her to Mr. Seager to be used as one of the Unicorn Line steamers for the trip on which she was lost.
